BUCHANAN THE STAR WITNESS.

If the collection register and the reports did not correspond to the day-book and ledger used in commercial work. However, he said he could not see the application.

Also, he was asked if he had taken any account of the amount of money on hand in the office at the time of the investigation or of the bank account or tax receipts in the drawer. The reply was that no attention had been paid to such matters, and that there might have been $50,000,000 on hand for all he knew.

Was it All County Money?
At this stage of the proceedings the question was raised as to whether all of the money alleged to be short belonged to the county. "Did not some of the amount due belong to the city or to the schools of the county?" asked Colonel Raley. But the district attorney instantly objected to the question as not material upon cross-examination. "However," said he, "if the counsel for the defense wishes to take up the subject of whose money it was, we are ready with references at any time. We maintain that the money primarily belonged to the county until it was segregated into the different funds."

Colonel Raley declined to go into a discussion of the question at that time, and the objection of the district attorney was sustained.

Sheriff's Reports Barred.
By this time the sheriff's bi-monthly reports had been secured and a copy of one was handed the witness. Colonel Raley attempted to ask a question in which the answer would be forthcoming from an examination of the document. District Attorney Phelps immediately objected on the ground that the reports were not material and should not be admitted as evidence in the case.

A heated debate then ensued, in which it became evident that the point was considered an important one. Judge Fee spoke at length and with vigor in favor of the admission of the reports. He was responded to with equal force by Attorney McCourt. Also, District Attorney Phelps fought hard against the reports being admitted.

In giving his decision Judge Ellis said that it seemed the reports showed the conditions in the office as they should exist and the amount that should be turned over to the treasurer, but did not show payment had been actually made. Consequently, the objection was sustained and the reports barred.

An adjournment was then taken until 1:30.

Afternoon Session.

At 1:30 Buchanan was again called and questioned by Raley.

"Did you take into account a report made by Davis on the first day of July, 1905?"

"No, sir."

The same reply was given to all questions concerning the reports made by Davis each quarter.

Colonel Raley now turned the witness over for re-direct examination. "Is your report absolutely correct. Mr. Buchanan?" asked Mr. Phelps.

"Yes, sir."

"Was it checked with the tax collection register and the assessment roll?"

"Yes, sir."

E. J. Somerville, county treasurer, was the next witness for the prosecution. He said that no money had been paid to him since taking office on the taxes of the years from '94 to '98 inclusive.

There had, however, been something paid all the years from and including the year 1899.

He then explained to the jury the manner in which the sheriff's books were kept.

Another Expert Corroborates.

J. F. Pfahler called for the prosecution. He testified that he had lived in Portland since last year, had expected books in the state of Oregon and had been in the business for the last 18 or 20 years. "I have always lived in Chicago previously to coming here and am acquainted with every phase of the work, having had experience in all lines during those years."

He was then handed exhibit 67, the report of the experts.

"Have you made an examination of that?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you in any way connected with the firm of Clark & Buchanan?"

"No, sir."

"Are you acquainted with either of them?"

"I am not acquainted with Clark, and only slightly with Buchanan."

"Have you any interest in any matter that he may be interested in?"

"None whatever."

"I will ask if that report is correct?"

"Yes, sir; it is."

"Have you checked the figures in this report?"

"All except the 1894 taxes."

"Have you a summary of the tax receipts which were not entered upon the collection register?"

"Yes; they aggregate $276.89."

"Do you know whether or not the money was ever turned in?"

"The books do not show that it was."

"Is the report of Clark & Buchanan correct?"

"Absolutely."

Judge Fee then took the witness and asked:

"When did you come here?"

"Yesterday."

"When did you have access to the books?"

"At 7 o'clock yesterday morning."

"When did you finish checking the books?"

"At 12 o'clock last night."

"Do you mean to say that you checked over every item that would affect the report?"

"I did not check every item affecting the report, but every item that was shown on the report."

Taylor Again Called.

When the court reconvened at 2:30 Sheriff Taylor was called. He named C. P. Davis, A. C. Funk, W. H. Fowler as having been employed in his office, the latter only during tax collecting time. Of these Davis was chief deputy and had charge of the books, the cash and the keeping of the bank account. He then again narrated the manner in which tax payments are received. Funk and Fowler, he said, would receive money during the day, while the money would be turned over to Davis to enter on the collection register and finally to deposit in the bank.

Regarding the office safe he stated that he and Davis only had keys to the money box. However, there was a change box in which small amounts were kept and to which Funk had access.

The private books of the office were then introduced and identified. In these books were kept the accounts between the office and the sheriff and deputies. They were kept by Davis.

"On July 12, 1905, did you make a payment to the treasurer?" was asked.

"Yes," replied the sheriff. "How much?"

"$12,000. Of this amount," he said, "all but $1200 had been in the office at the time."

In answer to further inquiries the sheriff said that at that time he had $1,900 county money on hand, but this was secured by scrip and state certificates left by him in the cash till. When the $12,000 payment was made this amount was made up.

The sheriff was then asked if he had examined the experts' report and replied he had. Also, that he had checked the same and found that the monies noted as received were correct.

Taylor Cross-Examined.

In reply to questions from Judge Fee Taylor told of the deputies in the office, that he did no book work, leaving all to Davis.

"Did you not see the report submitted to county court by Davis July 17?"

"I may have seen the report, but did not foot it up."

"Did you know that the money of your office was not being turned over to the treasurer according to law?"

"I cannot say as to that," replied Taylor. "I was not fully acquainted with the law."

A receipt book was then produced and a void receipt shown, it being developed that in such a case the amount would not be charged to the office. The way in which money was turned over to Davis was gone into, it being the purpose to show that money might have been taken by another.

That the safe doors were occasionally left open was admitted by Taylor, but that such occurred often was denied. Further questions revealed that Davis had been absent from the office several times while ill. At one time in 1902 he was in the hospital at Walla Walla.

"For some time after that he was not about the office regularly, was he?" asked Judge Fee.

"I don't recall anything of that kind," replied Taylor.

The turn-over made in July was then recalled and former questions again asked.

"Is it not a fact that you carried a large amount of tax receipts for citizens of Umatilla county?"

"Yes, sir; some were carried."

It was then brought out that the same was done for accommodation, and that when the money was desired it would be secured by a deputy. This was done partly to save parties waiting for hours for their receipts.

Yesterday Afternoon.

After the technical work of identifying the records was made yesterday, A. C. Funk, deputy sheriff, was called and gave the first testimony bearing directly on the case. Under cross-examination by Judge Fee, Funk gave the details of the collection and entering of the taxes and showed that the first step is the issuing of the tax receipts. These receipts are prepared in duplicate by carbon copy, and the original is given the taxpayer and the duplicate kept in the office. From this duplicate the amounts collected are entered in the collection register.

"What do you do, Mr. Funk, when you collect a greater amount than should be collected, after you discover the error?" asked Judge Fee.

"If the amount has been paid over by us to the treasurer it is returned by the county court, and the records are corrected."

This reply brought out an important point for the defense, as Funk then told how corrections were made in the receipt book and the correct entries entered upon the collection register with a lead pencil. This testimony showed how it was possible for a larger amount to be entered upon the collection book than was actually taken in by the office through the error of overcharging and the subsequent rebating by the county court. "Errors are quite frequent, are they not?" "Well, yes; small errors are," admitted the witness.

By this testimony the attorneys for the defense laid their first foundation for erasures and corrections in the books and the establishment of the fact that through the methods of entry and bookkeeping it was possible for the books to show a greater balance than was taken in. An example of this was given where a piece of real estate would be taxed to a party not the owner, and the error would not be discovered until after it had been paid and the receipt issued. The error then being discovered the county court would refund the money and the property taxed to the right party, when a second receipt would be issued. In this way two receipts would be issued for the same amount where but one sum had been paid in and the receipt stubs show double the right amount.

Buchanan on Stand.

Expert Buchanan was next called, as the principal witness for the prosecution. Objections were continually raised by the defense to the admission of the Buchanan testimony and to the admission of the report of the experts, on the ground that the books themselves were the best evidence. The court overruled these objections and the witness then testified that he was 44 years of age and had been in the business of public accounting for the past seven or eight years, having experted the books in half the counties of Oregon.

Buchanan was then handed the report he had made to the county commissioner, and from it testified to the shortages he had found in the books through money being received, receipts issued, and no entry made of the collection upon the collection register. The shortages occurring in this manner were $78.65 in 1894, $32.95 in 1895, $92.21 in 1896, $227.27 in 1897, $447.68 in 1898, $6.22 in 1899, $320.66 in 1900, $552.02 in 1901, $712.99 in 1902, $533.84 in 1903, and $71.41 in 1904.

The first incriminating evidence was brought out when Buchanan replied to the question as to how these shortages occurred. "They were made by issuing receipts without entering the amount collected upon the collection register." The witness showed that in checking the receipts they were aware of the correction of errors as made in the office and explained by Funk, and that no shortages were reported which did not exist, as the tax receipts were checked with the assessment rolls.

Without going into details of the report any further, Attorney Phelps turned the witness over for cross-examination and the court adjourned.

A shipment of 1,000,000 salmon eggs will be made from Tehama, Cal., to New Zealand, by the Mill Green hatchery.
