RECOMMENDS WIRELESS.

Government Commission Would Protect the Northwest Coast.

Following is the text of the government report recommending wireless telegraph stations for the northwest coast:

(5) A system of wireless stations should be established, including stations at Cape Flattery light, Point Wilson or Point Partridge, Seattle and at the Puget Sound navy yard, and also down the Pacific coast at least to Gray's Harbor.

The commission is advised that the navy department has now in course of building a wireless station at Cape Flattery and that it has already granted appropriations for Point Wilson and Seattle. If this be done by the navy department it will fulfill the requirements of this recommendation.

It is believed by the commission, based upon the assurances of important steamship interests on this coast, that as soon as the government establishes wireless outfits at Cape Flattery, wireless apparatus will also be installed on a large number of steamers on this coast, so that intelligence can be transmitted from them to the light house at Cape Flattery and also to this proposed new life saving tug at Neah bay.

The question of communication was one which played a very serious part in the Valencia disaster. Had there been a wireless apparatus at Cape Flattery at that time it is almost certain that rescue tugs could have been at the scene of the wreck by Tuesday evening, at least 12 hours before the rescue fleet actually got there, and if the Valencia had also been equipped with wireless apparatus the rescue tugs could probably have been at the scene of the wreck early Tuesday morning.

HIGHEST RAILWAY BRIDGE.

Colorado Railway Will Span the Royal Gorge.

What is believed to be the highest steel railway bridge in the world will be built this spring by the Canon City, Florence, Royal Gorge & Interurban Railway company, over the Arkansas river, at a cost of something like $100,000. The bridge will span the famed Royal Gorge at a point directly above the hanging bridge of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, and will be more than 2500 feet above the bed of the Arkansas river. The span will be of the suspension pattern, of solid steel, and will have a length of 500 feet. Its cost is estimated at $100,000.

The announcement that a bridge is to be built over this piece of mountain scenery will cause considerable interest in the eastern states, and it is believed that many tourists will visit it when completed.

Street cars are to run across the span, and it is proposed to erect a hotel to cost $200,000 near one of its approaches.

States at present is over the Kentucky river in Jessamine county, being 350 river in Jessamine county, being 350 feet above the low water mark.

Found Counterfeiting Outfit.

While blasting out stumps on the right of ways on the west side of the Horn recently, the workmen found a complete counterfeiting outfit, including tools, a dark lantern, moulds, a lathe and an electro plating outfit. It had evidently been buried a number of years as the box which contained it had entirely rotted away and all the tools were nearly eaten up with rust. Old residents say that about 10 years ago a counterfeiter was captured in this vicinity and "sent up" for a number of years. In all probability this was his equipment.—Wahsougai News.

SENATORS SCARED

ELKINS IS THE MOST ACTIVE RAILROAD TOOL.

Railroad Rate Bill Brings Many of the Corporation Rascals From Under Cover—Foraker Always Ready to Defend the Senate Against the Charges of Corporation Control—Elkins Believed to Be Dishonest in His Advocacy of Rate Regulation.

A letter from Washington, D. C., discussing the attitude of leading senators on the railroad rate bill, says: Probably Senator Elkins of West Virginia is the worst scared member of the senate, on account of the reputation he has earned. For years Steve Elkins has been listed among the "corporation senators," and has been regarded as a particular friend of the railroads, possibly because of his large personal holdings in railroad stock.

When the rate fight began, Elkins stood with Aldrich and against the president. But West Virginia, which suffers more from railroad abuses than any other state in the union, was quick to show its teeth, and after unsuccessful attempts to convince the people of West Virginia that his position was right, Elkins finally abandoned the cause he started in to support, and has fallen in line with the president.

It would have been political suicide for Elkins to have stood pat, for his state is so overwhelmingly in favor of effective rate legislation that it would have kept him out of office without a moment's hesitation had he not changed his position. Even now it is extremely doubtful whether Elkins can save himself, for public is suspicious of men who repent in the eleventh hour, and West Virginia is skeptical about Elkins' change of front.

There is a general suspicion that he has changed only long enough to secure another election, for he comes up for re-election next winter. However, for the time being Elkins professes to be a staunch supporter of the president in the rate fight, and he can't be interviewed too often on this topic. If repeated declarations in favor of the rate bill which the president supports will save him, Elkins will be re-elected. But he is worried over his own prospects.

Senator Foraker of Ohio is another man who always jumps up to enter a denial whenever some senator intimates that the railroads control some of the members of the senate. Mr. Foraker enters a disclaimer on his own behalf, and is always particular to say that he believes no member of the senate is prompted by any but the highest motives in advocating this or that sort of rate legislation.

Because he has taken the most radical view of any member of the senate on the rate question, a view as far from the president's ideas as that advanced by any man, Senator Foraker has been classed with Senator Aldrich and Senator Elkins and he seems to be unable to live down his reputation.

SANITARIUM ON HILLTOP.

Boise Capitalists Plan a Health Resort and Car Line.

A park of 1000 acres on top of the mountains north of Boise, where there are springs of pure water gushing forth the whole year, a large sanitarium for the accommodation of seekers after better health, and a winding electric road running from Boise to this place of beauty and rest, forms the basis of a scheme evolved by E. C. Cook and which is looked upon favorably by prominent business men of the city, says the Boise Statesman.

It is believed by Mr. Cook that to erect a sanitarium on top of the mountains mentioned, which would be about seven or eight miles from Boise, and build a car line to it, would be one of the most practical investments that could be made in or around Boise, and that it would be a paying proposition from the beginning.

His idea is to secure from the government 500 to 1000 acres of land there and convert it into a park. There is enough water there, he states, for that purpose. Then to build the sanitarium. The water is pure, the air is fresh in the mountains. There is not a day, he says, during the hottest weather of the summer when the air is not cool and refreshing.

HOOD RIVER GROWING.

Wonderful Activity in Oregon's Leading Fruit District.

A correspondent of the Oregon Daily Journal from Hood River says of the wonderful activity of that district:

Never in its history have so many apple trees been set out in Hood River valley as within the past 10 days. It is estimated that 1000 acres of trees have been planted this spring, with about 64 trees to the acre, making a total of 64,000 trees. W. Van Horn H. F. Davidson and C. R. Bone have together planted 450 acres of trees, and with many other growers who have set out new orchards the number of acres put in Hood River's famous product it is said will reach the above figure.

Other improvements in the valley will include the erection of a $12,000 residence by Willis Van Horn on top of a large hill near his orchard, which he has purchased, overlooking the valley, and from which a fine view of Mount Hood can be obtained. It is Mr. Van Horn's intention to have the house built on top of the knoll, with a circular driveway built around it.

up which a team will be able to ascend at a trot. It will be lighted by electricity from the Hood River Electric Light & Power company by a private wire from town and will be the finest residence about Hood River.

The end of the summer will see the new $60,000 plant of the Hood River irrigation district in operation. The company now has 75 men at work on the ditch and it is expected that more will be put on later. This will give the apple growing district better irrigation facilities than it has heretofore had from the old plant, made necessary by the setting out of many new orchards.

It is expected that the Mount Hood railroad will market some of the apple product this year, thus saving growers the long haul by wagon, by which the fruit is frequently injured. The proposition of the company to electrify it is meeting with a good deal of enthusiasm by residents of the valley.

LOOKED INTO HIS OWN LUNGS.

Nervy Feat of Walls Walla Man in Surgical Operation.

Holding a mirror in his hand while the operating physicians cut open his chest and doctored his lungs was the nerve feat performed by A. E. Pike at the Walla Walla hospital this morning, says the Lewiston Tribune. Mr. Pike is father of Albert Brighton, a member of the Lee Willard theatrical company now appearing at the Binnard in this city.

Mr. Brighton received word of the successful operation on his father by long distance phone this afternoon. His father has been confined to his bed for over a month, his lungs having become filled with flour dust.

For weeks Brighton's father has not taken a full breath, and heart action has been stimulated by injections of morphia. When an operation became necessary the doctors decided it would be unsafe to administer anaesthetics, so the operation had to be performed with the patient in full possession of his faculties.

Brighton's father went through the ordeal with a mirror in his hand watching the knife-work of the doctors. After the operation the patient recomposed with the physicians because they would not permit him to smoke a cigar for the first time since his lungs have been freed from the flour dust.
