BITHULITHIC PAVEMENT GOOD.

The Work of Cutting Through Pavement to Repair Water Mains Proves Its Value.

The bithulithic pavement laid on Pendleton streets by the Warren Construction company is better than the specifications. The specifications called for but two inches of surface, while the surface in places is over four inches thick and is as hard as iron.

The pavement has been opened in five places on Main street for the purpose of repairing water mains, and it required workmen from three to five hours to cut out a section a few square feet in extent. It is almost impossible to cut it with ordinary tools and there is every evidence that it will last even longer than the contract calls for with slight repairs.

Those who have witnessed the work of cutting through it are satisfied that the city has made no mistake in having bithulithic paving.

Friest Lake, Idaho, has reached the highest stage during the past few days ever recorded, because of heavy rains and quickly melting snows.
