

FIFTEEN YEARS OF ECZEMA

Affected Hands, Arms and Legs—Endured Terrible Itching and was Unable to Sleep—Would Tear the Bandages to Scratch the Skin—In less than One Week

CURED BY THE CUTICURA REMEDIES

"I had eczema nearly fifteen years. The affected parts were my hands, arms and legs. They were the worst in the winter time and were always itchy, and I could not keep from scratching them. I had to keep both hands bandaged all the time, and at night I would have to scratch through the bandages as the itching was so severe, and at times I would have to tear everything off my hands to scratch the skin. I could not rest or sleep. I had several physicians treat me but they could not give me a permanent cure, nor even could they stop the itching. After using the Cuticura Soap, one box Cuticura Ointment and two bottles Cuticura Resolvent for about six days the itching had ceased, and now the sores have disappeared, and I never felt better in my life than I do now. TOO MANY KINDS OF WHEAT GROWN

WASHINGTON GRAIN INSPECTOR TALKS BUSINESS.

J. W. Arrasmith Says Farmers Grow Too Many Varieties of Wheat—Turkey Red Is Highly Commended—Too Many Kinds of Club and Bluestem Grown.

State Grain Inspector John W. Arrasmith, who arrived back today from an extended trip through the cereal districts of Washington, says the wheatgrowers of the state are making a mistake in growing so many varieties of grain, says a Tacoma dispatch. He believes that it is a bad handicap on the wheat growing industry and that the farmers should be induced to get rid of all the varieties barring two or three. "I would recommend," said he this afternoon, "that Turkey red and Jones five be used for fall sowing in the arid and semi-arid sections of the state for a winter wheat and bluestem be used in these sections for spring wheat."

"In the heavy soils of the humid districts forty-fold, white amber and Russian red are the best varieties for fall sowing, and little club and red chaff club for spring wheat. All of these varieties are good milling wheat with the possible exception of red Russian and I regard it as a fair milling grain when raised under good conditions."

"At the present time the farmers are growing a number of types of club, a number of bluestem and also of red. We ought to grow only about two of each kind. This would greatly simplify the grading of the grain, and the wheat exported from our state would be standardized in the markets and we would get much better reputation all over the world than we now have."

"The buyer would know exactly what he was getting and the seller what he was selling. As it is now, cars containing several varieties of wheat are shipped to inspection points and it is impossible to grade this mixture satisfactorily and we consequently have a mixture of grades."

"Such wheat is not worth as much to the miller as either one of the varieties making the conglomeration would be worth standing alone, and the result is that the value of the entire car is impaired from the miller's standpoint. This condition has only obtained in recent years, and it is becoming a serious knock to the grain industry of Washington."

EXPLAINS A DIFFICULT VERSE.

Haudenschield Draws Conclusive Lessons From Mooted Text.

The "Hard Saying of Scripture," announced as the text for last night's sermon at the union meeting, proved to be from Romans 3:12—"For there is no difference." It was a well wrought and forcible sermon from first to last and held the attention of the large audience closely throughout.

The difficulty of the text was largely removed when the preacher announced the proposition that there is a difference in the heinousness of sin, but not in the guilt. This was the theme of the sermon.

It was emphasized by well chosen illustrations and direct applications to life, such as the following: Suppose two men are on trial today, one of them under the charge of murder, the other for small theft. The last man might plead, "I am not guilty, for I have not committed the crime of murder." Innocence of one crime would not save him from being guilty of another. A man does not have to break every law on the statute books to be a criminal, only one, and that the least, perhaps, in importance.

The prodigal was such from the moment he turned his back on his father's house, just as much so as when he wasted his substance in riotous living and was in rags. His filth and pollution may have been greater later, but he was guilty from the first.

The leper was a leper from the time the first clear indication of disease was manifested. The disease was more repulsive in its latter stages, but it was no more leprosy than at first.

Man needs to remember that he cannot hide the fact of the little sin from God. Prominent teachers of science assert today that the very thoughts of a man's inmost and silent self are forces that may spread in imperceptible waves of power till somewhere in God's universe they make their own record.

We shrink from the thought of the unveiling of all our thoughts before our friends. Yet that is what will be done in the last day, before all the world, if the record is not made clean by the atonement of Jesus Christ. "The things done in secret shall be proclaimed from the housetop."

But the "blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from sin." "I, even I, am he that bloteth out thy transgressions." Again, "There is no difference, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that believe." All that man must and can do is to step into
