MAY TAKE AWAY PASSES.
Interstate Commerce Commission Questions Free Passes of Railroad Attorneys.

If the railroad commission of Oregon follows the ruling of the interstate commerce commission, many local attorneys for railroads henceforth must go without annual passes, says a Washington dispatch. It has been the practice of roads to select an efficient and influential attorney in each county along their lines who could be relied upon to attend to the company's interests, and while not placing these attorneys on salary to give annual passes, as though they were employed by the road.

Often unless called on to serve in a particular suit, no money has passed from the company to the attorney, yet they are carried on the free transportation list of the road, and the annual pass is practically all the compensation received, it being regarded as sufficient. The federal commission has looked into this situation with some care and has ruled that local attorneys of railroads cannot, under the existing law, use passes on interstate journeys.

It also rules that all attorneys who receive passes must be in the employ of the company as their chief occupation, not as a mere side issue in their law practice.

The federal commission realizes that this ruling will cut off many so-called railroad attorneys who now travel on free transportation, some belonging to the legislature, others going going to the state capitals to lobby, and still others coming to Washington for the same purpose, and as alleged regular attorneys of road having received transportation over connecting lines of their companies.

If the Oregon commission, as in the past, adopts the policy of following when possible the federal commission's rulings, and applies it in this instance many Oregon attorneys will be deprived of their perquisites and must go without their annual passes, being entitled to trip passes when actually on legal business for the corporation.

To Have New Court House.

At a joint session of the county court and business men's committee last evening the various bids for enclosing the new court house were discussed, says the Baker City Herald. The county court decided that the bid of T. R. Yeager, being the lowest, was the one that suited them. This bid is for enclosing the building under roof at a cost of $59,500 to the county. To enclose under room means that the contractor is to furnish all material and labor from the basement to the roof—basement to be of Haines granite, building to be of native gray stone dressed according to specifications and roof is to be of asbestos shingles. This will also include the steel eye beams, joists and heavy timbers.
