SHEEP SHEARERS MAKE GOOD WAGES

MACHINE SHEARERS
EARN $12 PER DAY

Each Shearer Must Own a $15 Machine and Furnish His Own Combs and Knives—Many of the More Skillful Shearers Shear 150 Per Day at 8½ Cents Each.

Since the introduction of sheep shearing machines in eastern Oregon, the professional sheep shearer must invest more money in equipment than with the hand shearing system, but they also earn larger incomes and do not work so hard as under the old system.

While the power plant is furnished by the shepherds, yet each shearer is supposed to own his individual shearing machine, including comb and knife and must keep his own machine in proper condition.

The individual shearing machines cost about $15 each, and the knives from 15 to 20 cents each and the combs about 60 cents each. One knife will shear about 25 head of clean woolled sheep, but if the sheep are dirty, they will not shear more than five or six. In real sandy wool a knife will not shear more than two sheep.

With the machines in good condition and with clean wool an ordinary shearer will shear 150 sheep in a day of 10 hours, which at 8½ cents per head makes a daily income of $12.75. An ordinary day's work yields $10. It costs the shearer about 75 cents per day for board and 50 cents per day for knives and other incidentals, leaving a handsome income from the day's work.

A number of Umatilla county shearers have made an average of more than 150 head during the entire season, while others less skillful have averaged but little more than 100 head.

Shearing with the machines entails much less labor on the shearer than with the hand shears. There is no sarpening shears after every sheep and no tedious grinding every evening after the day's work. The change of knives is but a few seconds' work and the machines can be kept constantly at work without interruption or worry for the shearer.

The system of hand shearing is now rapidly passing out of sight and sheepmen predict that it will be but a few years until all the sheep of the country are sheared with machines.
