Irrigation Talk No. 33

The Ditch

Mr. Marble, the greatest irrigation engineer in America, who has built or reconstructed most of the irrigation projects in Yakima and elsewhere, is pronounced in approval of the general scheme of the present Furnish ditches. Some changes are necessary, he says, but they can readily be effected without the slightest interference with the delivery of water to all grounds now opened up. This Marble, by the way, is the senior member of the firm of Marble brothers, and he has taken up his residence as actual constructive and reconstructive engineer of the project.

The Furnish-Coe lands are going fast. The price is advancing.

Yet this actually took place yesterday when the city council and members of their party left Eugene bright and early to view Ritchey creek, upper Leaburg, and report upon its possibilities as a source of municipal water supply.
