OVER 100,000 LET LOOSE AS EXPERIMENT

Part of Campaign Inaugurated by State and National Agricultural Authorities Against Destructive Pests—Four Different Varieties of Flies and Beetles Expected to Do the Work.

Boston, May 29.—Over 100,000 moth-destroying parasites have been let loose from the experiment station at Melrose Highlands this month, as a result of the campaign inaugurated by the national and state agricultural authorities against the destructive gypsy and brown-tail moths. Four distinct varieties of parasitic flies and beetles have been used in such experiment.

The large colossa beetles, as well as two other species closely allied to them, climb the trees, seize the caterpillar and never let go until they have devoured the wriggling insect. The tachinid flies lay their eggs upon the outer skin of the caterpillars usually close up to the head. The larvae that hatch penetrate the skin of the caterpillar and feed upon its intestines.

Another group of parasites deposit eggs inside the skin of the caterpillar, and there is another parasite, a minute midge, that drills into the eggs of the caterpillar and lays its eggs inside. The larvae of the parasite feed upon the contents of the caterpillar's eggs until ready to emerge. Some of these flies also enter the nests or winter webs of the brown tail moths and there operate upon the hibernating caterpillars during the winter months.

The scientists say there is every reason to believe that in time these parasites will accomplish the practical suppression of the gypsy moth here as they have in Europe.

The present experiment is regarded as the most important that has been tried in the war against the gypsy moth.

The workers at the experiment station, who include trained naturalists from the department of agriculture in Washington, assert that there is no likelihood that the parasites themselves will prove to be undesirable additions to New England insect life as all the imported species which are found to be in any way dangerous have been rejected. It is the theory of the scientists that after the parasites have reduced the ranks of the gypsy and brown tail moths they will themselves become fewer in number from lack of food supply.

MONUMENT TO DIXON.

"Sports" Erect Granite Likeness of Colored Fighter.

Boston, May 29.—"Erected in memory of George Dixon by the sport-loving public of America," is the simple inscription upon the plate of the $1500 monument erected over the grave of the clever little negro boxer, who died in New York early this year. The memorial will be unveiled tomorrow in Mt. Hope cemetery, with appropriate ceremonies in which many of the leading sporting men of the country will participate. Dixon died in poverty, although he had made and spent several fortunes during his pugilistic career.

A bronze figure six feet six inches in height, representing Dixon in fighting costume, standing erect with one hand resting on the hip, the other hanging at his side, surmounts the base of the monument, which is made of perfect granite and is six feet square and of similar height.

Funds for the monument were raised by popular subscription, followers of the pugilistic game in all parts of the country, being among the contributors.

"TOM" MOORE'S BIRTHDAY.
Memory of Irish Poet Honored in Brooklyn.

New York, May 29.—Under the auspices of the St. Patrick's society, the birthday of "Tom" Moore was observed today at the bust of the Irish poet in the flower garden of Prospect park, Brooklyn. City officials, prominent citizens and delegations from nearly all the Irish societies of Greater New York took part in the exercises.

It was considered fitting that the celebration should be held by the St. Patrick's society, as on May 28, 1873, the centenary of Moore's birthday, his bust, which was set up by the society, was unveiled.

For some years following it was the custom of the society and its friends to visit the garden, place a wreath on the bust, and hold exercises of some kind. In recent years this has not been done, but at the last annual dinner of the St. Patrick's society it was determined to revive the custom on a larger scale than of old.

In an interview with Judge Fee of Pendleton, the following was elicited: "In my experience I have found that from 75 to 90 per cent of crime is caused by the saloon. A number of young men are in prison from this county for cattle stealing and various crimes and they first entered the saloon, next gambled, and then it was bad women. After that the pathway of crime was easy."

If you see it in the East Oregonian, it's so.

PROHIBITION IN EUGENE.

Letter Received in Pendleton Shows Conditions As They Are.

"As to the effect the closing of saloons has had on Eugene, I will say that prohibition, which has been in effect here since July 1, 1906, has reduced the income of the city of Eugene as follows:

Twelve saloon licenses in 1906 at $800 each, $9600; 12 saloon licenses in 1907 at $800 each, $9600; total, $19,200.

"As against the city recorder's docket shows 58 arrests for drunkenness from July 1, 1904, to July 1, 1906, 114 arrests for drunkenness from July 1, 1906, to July 1, 1908.

"From July 1, 1904, to July 1, 1906, the employees of the logging camps, saw mills and mining camps tributary to Eugene, spent an average of $1,000,000 a year in Eugene. The streets were crowded with men with their pockets full of money, who were having a good time, and buying the best grade of clothing, furnishing goods, hats, caps, shoes and supplies of all kinds. Twenty dollar gold pieces were jingling everywhere and travelers stopping over in Eugene in invariably remarked, 'this is the best town between Portland and Sacramento, and a very orderly place.'

"Rents were higher, there was not a vacant house to be found in the city. New buildings were going up and were leased or rented before they were completed. Since July 1 we have a very different condition, the employees of the logging camps, saw mills, and mining camps, have as a rule, not stopped in Eugene long enough to get a shave, they have taken the first train to Portland, Salem or Roseburg, and spend the millions of dollars that would have been spent in Eugene, had there have been the attractions and amusements that they found here before prohibition went into effect.

"The United States government records in Portland shows 56 retail liquor licenses issued and now in force in Lane county, Oregon, with the local option prohibition law in effect. Twenty-four of these licenses are in the city of Eugene, while there were only 12 licenses issued for Eugene prior to July 1, 1906.

"The prohibitionists here are trying to take the credit of the improved condition of Eugene's streets on account of the paving of 14 blocks with bitulithic pavement, when the facts are that Mayor Wilkins and his high license, anti-prohibition council took up the question of paving, went to Portland and thoroughly investigated the different kinds of pavement, and passed the law requiring these streets to be paved with bitulithic, and the work of the new pavement is simply in accordance with their orders. Eugene is a beautiful city, there are many women and children and idle men on the streets every day, but the worker from the mills and woods "with the money in their pockets" don't come here any more. The Eugene Commercial club, in a fit of desperation, has employed a 'California Booster' at a salary of $6000 a year in an attempt to attract capital, but many of our level headed business men are of the opinion that all that is needed is a return of the conditions of two years ago.
