"MARTIN EDEN."

Pacific Monthly Announces Great Story by Famous Author. The following announcement has just been received by the East Oregonian from the Pacific Monthly: Doubtless the keenest joy known to the editorial soul, after receiving and reading a great novel, is the joy of announcement of it to readers. Our experience with Herman Whitaker's fine story, "The Settler," which was concluded some months ago, taught us that no feature of a magazine is more widely appreciated and eagerly sought than a strong serial. Ever since this, we have been trying to get another strong novel. Some people have an impression that the literary woods are full of unknown geniuses who can write great stories, but that no opportunity exists for such, as the authors with the "great names" monopolize the field. Thousands of writers imagine that, if only they had a chance, Fame would be theirs, too. But it seems to be the concurrence of publishing experience that a good thing is rare. If you want to be sure of securing a masterly work, you must apply to those who have established their right to be called masters. In our search for a great novel, we have been impressed by the fact that every other publisher is seeking the same thing; the work of every masterly author is eagerly snapped up. We wrote to every author of note in America, setting forth our want, and offering any price for the right thing. We found every one of them willing enough, but the work of each had been spoken for for at least a year ahead. London, who has already contributed several short stories to the Pacific Monthly, we scarcely hoped to reach, and did not communicate with him, as he was out of the country, until we accidentally learned that he had just completed, and was sending from somewhere in the South Seas, the manuscript of his latest novel. An urgent telegram and letter to his agent, Mrs. Ninetta Eames, offering a good round sum for the mere privilege of reading the manuscript, and for an option upon it for 10 days, brought a prompt and favorable reply. The manuscript came, beautifully typewritten, 142,000 words in length. "Mr. London says you may give it for title, either 'Success' or 'Martin Eden,'" wrote Mrs. Eames, "and as for its character, judge for yourself."

Mr. London himself is too modest to express himself beyond the following brief remark in a letter: "I do not know what you will think of this novel; I do not know what to think of it myself. But at any rate you will find it entirely different from anything else I have done." It is quite different from anything else Mr. London has ever done. It is neither surcharged with the author's tendency to sociological discussion, nor with many of the peculiarities of manner and form found in all his other work. It establishes the author's reputation for versatility, and will without question take rank among the great novels of recent years. "You must have that novel," said Charles Erskine Scott Wood, after he had finished reading the manuscript; "it is a good story." But we had already telegraphed our acceptance. While Mr. London's price, $7000, seemed a bit heavy for a young western magazine, we were, of course aware that we were getting the first-comer's bargain; especially after receiving a telegram from a 000 for our option. Maybe we are a bit garrulous in gossiping thus, but really, we may be pardoned jubilation over our new possession. Something further as to the story?

Mrs. Eames, who knows Mr. London like a mother, says that he has woven into Martin Eden a thinly disguised picture of his own early struggles for success in literature. Somehow there is a suggestion of Les Miserables—Jean Valjean—though of course with an entirely dissimilar motive. Writes a critical friend whom we asked to read the manuscript: "Once in a generation there struggles to the light a soul nurtured in darkness, but born to power irresistible. Martin Eden is the portrayal of such a soul—striving, toiling, fighting for, and, in the end, winning knowledge from ignorance, culture from degradation, and eminence from obscurity. Through all, his guiding star is a woman in the higher sphere to which he at last attains; but the mainstay of his success is the majesty of his strength, the tenacity of his courage, and the sublimity of his purpose."

CANADIAN FIG GROWING.

Methods of Raising Sub-tropical Fruit in Ontario.

Consul A. G. Seyfert, of Collingwood, reports that the culture of figs has proved successful in the Canadian province of Ontario. He says: "The Niagara peninsula, that part of Ontario west of the Niagara river to the western end of Lake Ontario, is well known as one of the finest fruit-growing sections in the province if not in Canada, but it may surprise many to learn that fig culture has been successfully conducted near Niagara on the lake for the last 40 years. The climate of this section of the peninsula appears peculiarly suited for the culture of figs. The open waters of Lake Ontario and the Niagara river modify the temperature greatly, and the usually comparatively mild winter, as compared with the same latitude elsewhere, followed by a backward spring—caused by the ice coming down the river from the upper lake—and the dry and warm summer, produce an ideal climate for all kinds of fruit, especially figs. The fig is a native of subtropical countries, and is almost unknown in central North America in its fresh state. The theory is that figs will succeed in any country where peaches and apricots do well without protection, if the fig plant receives proper winter protection. The fig growers of the Niagara district protect their plants in the following manner during the winter: As soon as the leaves have fallen and sharp frosts set in, two or three of the branches are bent to the ground in their natural direction and tied loosely with strips of cotton or other soft material and held in place by crocheted pegs, care being taken not to injure the bark. When all branches are down the whole is covered with a mound of earth three to four feet in depth. In the writer's experience fine sand is preferable to earth, as it keeps away mice and cut worms, which are injurious to the young wood. In the spring when danger from severe frost is over, air is let into the mound by holes made with a small pole or the handle of a rake, and during the following 10 days the earth is removed in installments. Care must be taken that the bark is not injured in the process. When the bush is fully exposed it is generally found that bearing wood is covered with small fruit, about the size of a large pea, while the buds show, but are not open. Varieties that have proved most successful at Niagara are the White and Purple Ischias, the Brown Turkey, and White Genoa.

The New Dime. The new dime will be opened this afternoon in the building formerly known as the Star theater. The place has been remodeled and fitted up especially for this show. An entirely new change of program will be presented there and Robert Penner, late of the Salt Air palace in Salt Lake City, will sing the illustrated song and also one other, while Mrs. Nelson will play the piano.

Show Shop and Pastime. There will be the usual changes of pictures at the Eagle Show Shop and Pastime tomorrow.

PERSONAL MENTION

Frank Snyder has been in town today from his wheat ranch. M. F. Wright, well-known young business man of Roseburg, is in the city for a few days. A. J. Watrus, a young farmer from near Adams, is among the county seat business visitors today. Adam Noble, a former Pendleton boy, but now of Pilot Rock, is in Pendleton today on business. Dave Lavender, former marshal of Weston, has been in the city for a couple of days on business. Herb Strohm has returned to his ranch near Hermiston after transacting business at the county seat. W. D. McCully of Joseph, Wallowa, county, is a visitor in the city today and a guest at the Hotel St. George. B. Jensen, the livestock insurance man, left last night for Athens, where he is attending the horse show today. Frank Hanly of Chicago, is now here upon a two days' visit with his old friend, B. C. Wilson, deputy sheriff. Glenn Scott, Pendleton student and football player at the University of Oregon, is home for the summer vacation. Elmer Storie has returned from Eugene, where he attended the university of Oregon during the past year. Miss Nellie McMullen returned home last evening from Portland, where she had been visiting for several weeks. Mrs. Lee Moorhouse returned last evening from Walla Walla and Milton where she had been visiting with relatives and friends. Mrs. N. E. Despain came home on the evening train yesterday from Milton where she had been upon a brief visit with relatives. J. G. Callison, who has been in the service of the Balfour-Guthrie company in this county for several years, will leave today for Spokane. T. J. Morris has moved his family into the house recently built for him by A. D. Sloan on Bush street. This is one of the neatest residences in the city. Harry Rees, assistant postmaster, is now at Lehman Springs for the purpose of locating his family for the summer and is expected home tomorrow. A. B. Herr, brother of Roy and Grover Herr, is expected to arrive this afternoon from his home in San Francisco, to spend the Fourth at the home of his mother, Mrs. George Griswold, on Jackson street. D. W. Campbell, division superintendent of the O. R. & N. and J. D. Matheson, roadmaster, were in the city this morning on official business. Campbell went on to Portland and Matheson returned to La Grande.

OPPORTUNITY.

The public career of almost every important man is due to the fortune of opportunity. A few like Webster rise wholly by their talents. Yet even these must have a field to work in. Lincoln came to the front through the effort to resist extension of slavery. Grant through the civil war. Cleveland because he had been an acceptable mayor of Buffalo, and a peculiar turn in the politics of New York gave him opportunity to become governor of the state, by a great majority. This commended him for nomination to the presidency. It is opportunity, usually, that makes the "self-made man."—Oregonian.

WHAT NEXT?

A young woman said she was born to be a farmer's wife because she engaged in milking when an infant, and took to cradling early. Later she often cut up and shocked her parents and filled her crib. At an early age she learned to sew, and she had cultivated her acquaintance with a young agriculturist, and as soon as she placed her affections she intended to "make hay while the sun was shining. This was too much for an impressed tiller of the soil, so he gathered her up into his arms and garnered her.

Parkes Family to Meacham. Mrs. Joe H. Parkes and three daughters, Misses Fieda, Phyllis and Effie, have left for "The Pines," their summer place, three-quarters of a mile from Meacham. The family will remain there during the entire summer.

G. M. Rice Has Recovered. G. M. Rice, cashier of the First National bank, has now recovered from a very severe illness of a week or more. He is now again at the bank attending to a portion of his duties there though he is not fully recovered from his illness.

Airship races will be one of the many attractions at the Alaska-Yukon exposition. The New York Aero club is taking great interest in the matter.

See "The Legend of a Ghost" at the Dime theater, commencing Sunday, June 28.
