AMUSEMENTS

Tragedy in Japan.
The Dime has a first-class line of motion pictures on today, among them being the "Hidden Hand," which is very sensational, and the "Tragedy in Japan," which is one of the most beautiful yet seen here. Both Dimes will be open this evening and tomorrow, and there will be a first-class program with illustrated songs on at both places. The usual change tomorrow.

Pastime Pleases.
The usual Friday change went on at the Pastime yesterday, among the new attractions being "The Miner's Daughter," which is very attractive, "Costumes of Different Centuries," and a new illustrated song. There will be a change tomorrow which promises to please the Sunday crowds.

Eagle Show Shop.
The Eagle Show Shop has been drawing the usual crowds the past few days with a fine set of pictures and illustrated songs. There will be another change tomorrow; something entirely new and up-to-date.

A SQUAW'S REBUKE

THE SUNDAY QUESTION FROM AN INDIAN STANDPOINT.

Jolly Crowd of Sunday Huckleberry Pickers Sharply Rebuked by a Umatilla Indian Woman—How to "Find Yourself" When Lost in the Mountains—An Old Sailor's Amusing Remedy.

Kamela, July 31.

To the East Oregonian:—

I saw a Umatilla Indian woman administer a stinging rebuke to a bunch of huckleberry pickers last Sunday, near here. There were a number of church members in the crowd that was out for a Sunday's vacation, and all of the jolly party was having a fine time. They were picking berries, cooking their dinner on a camp fire and were having a really enjoyable day in the mountains.

In the afternoon they came upon an Indian camp by a spring on the mountain side, and were surprised to find the two squaws and several papposes of the party in camp instead of out picking berries.

The members of the white party had a lot of fun "joshing" the squaws and finally one of the white women suggested that all Indians were lazy by nature and that these squaws preferred to loaf around camp rather than pick berries at $1 per gallon.

At this remark the elder squaw of the party raised up from the ground where she was lying, and shaking the bronzed fist vehemently at the woman who made the remark, she said: "Me Christian Injan; me no work on Sunday."

I have listened to sermons hours long, but I never saw a sermon "strike home" as did those eight words. Nothing further was said, but somehow there wasn't any fun among that white bunch all afternoon. One Puritanical squaw had "spilled" their Sunday.

How to Find Yourself.
After one has been lost in the mountains, everybody has a recipe for "finding yourself." It always seems strange to me to think that no one ever proffers a means of "finding yourself" until after one has been lost. It is a sort of grim irony to give out such information after the burning need for it has passed.

In all the mountain regions of the west, mountaineers have dozens of freakish "remedies" for getting lost, but one I have heard this week seems worth repeating. An old sailor told it. It is this: When you are lost in the timber and find yourself traveling in a circle, just take off your coat and turn it inside out, put it on again and start back the other way.

The old sailor who gave the "remedy" said it would work in a large majority of cases.

The process seems to "unwind" you after you have wound yourself up, traveling in a circle.
