WYOMING MINE A SEALED TOMB

FORTY CORPSES IN COAL MINE MAY NOT BE FOUND.

All Efforts to Open Mine No. 1 at Hanna, Wyoming, Are Unavailing—Forty Miners Lost Their Lives in Its Depths Last March.

A. E. Bradbury, assistant general manager of the Union Pacific Coal company, left this morning for Hanna, where another effort will be made to open the No. 1 Hanna mine, in which are entombed the corpses of over 40 miners who were killed by the explosions in the mine last March, says the Cheyenne Tribune.

Since the explosion, the mine has been sealed for the purpose of smothering the fires which caused the explosion and which burst out with dangerous force immediately afterward. Several careful investigations as to the condition of the fire have been made in which several bodies were removed, together with much debris. The last time the mine was opened was several weeks ago, and the workmen had been at work for some time when the fans began to draw from the bottom of the mine considerable smoke, showing that the air admitted to the mine to enable the men to work had escaped past the brattices and was stirring the smouldering fires below.

The mine was hastily closed and has remained sealed until it is believed that the fire is so low that there is no immediate danger. The most skilled men in the camp, under the personal supervision of Mr. Bradbury will enter the mine, building brattices and stoppings to shut off air from the fire, and these brattices will gradually and carefully be advanced until the fire is walled off in one corner of the mine and the bodies in the shafts can be taken out in safety.

The mine will probably never be worked again. It is so full of gas as to be always more or less dangerous and the last explosion so wrecked the workings that the expense of restoring them would be greater than the amount of coal to be taken out would pay for. When the bodies of the men and the valuable machinery and other materials are taken out, the mine will doubtless be abandoned.

THE FRUIT INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The tremendous volume of the apple and pear industry of the United States is shown in a comprehensive report on that subject compiled by W. N. White, a recognized authority on the fruit industry.

Mr. White takes each state and territory separately and shows how many apple and pear trees of fruit bearing age there were in the United States on June 30 last. Of course, the extent of the apple industry is many times greater than the pear industry, the number of the apple trees in the Union reaching the tremendous total of 291,794,642 trees, whereas the number of pear trees is 17,714,184.

Missouri heads the list of states and territories in the number of fruit-bearing apple trees, while California is first in the number of pear trees. In Missouri on June 30, there were 20,046,399 apple trees, while the number of pear trees in California was 2,512,890.

New York is second in both industries, the number of apple trees in this state bearing fruit being 15,054,822, while the pear trees in New York numbers 2,182,995. Illinois is third in the list of apple states, with 13,450,006 trees; Ohio fourth, with 12,952,825, and Kansas fifth, with 11,848,970 trees.

Other states that produce tremendous apple crops are Pennsylvania, Michigan, Virginia and Kentucky. Delaware with 1253 apple trees, is at the foot of the column, and North Dakota, with 2351 trees, next to foot in the list of apple states.

In the number of pear trees Michigan is third, with 1,187,110 trees; Texas fourth, with 1,044,680, and New Jersey fifth with 926,117 trees.

North Dakota is a bad last in the pear industry there having been, according to Mr. White's figures, only three fruit-bearing pear trees in that state on June 30. Wyoming, with 135 trees, and Delaware, with 1118 trees, follow North Dakota with the fewest number of pear trees.

Mr. White says that while the apple and pear industries do not rank with the grain and wheat crops, the figures show the magnitude of the former industry, and that reckoning apples at 40 and pears at 60 trees to the acre, it will be seen that the total acreage is above five million, which is 50 per cent greater than the potato crop, while the harvesting of the crop gives employment to five times as many persons as the potato crop.

UNCLE SAM DON'T LIKE NEW WHEAT

SEVEN HEADED WHEAT
NOT GOOD FOR FLOUR

Alaska Variety Capable of Producing Two Hundred Bushels to the Acre Makes Poor Flour—Department of Agriculture Receiving Many Requests for Seed—Has Been Grown in France for Many Years—Experts are Skeptical About Its Virtues.

Thousands of inquiries are being received by the department of agriculture regarding the new variety of wheat raised by Abraham Adams of Juliaetta, Idaho, which is alleged to produce as high as 222 bushels an acre, says a Washington letter. The Saturday Evening Post of last week exploited this wheat and since then the department of agriculture has had no peace. In order to ascertain the facts, Director French of the Idaho experimental station at Moscow has been directed to visit the Adams farm and see the wheat for himself.

According to reports the wheat in question has a composite head, that is, each head is made up of a cluster of ordinary heads and is of white, soft variety.

Agricultural experts are skeptical about it and say that it is a strain of "miracle" wheat or seven-headed wheat that has long been grown in different parts of the mountain regions. They say they have analyzed it and found it low in protein. They also doubt whether it is good milling wheat and think farmers should go slow about taking up with it until the department has investigated.

Another report from Washington says: A variety of wheat under the name "Alaska" is being advertised widely as capable of yielding at the rate of 200 bushels to the acre "under ordinary soil conditions."

It is stated that this variety was found growing wild on the eastern coast of Alaska and claims of the most extravagant nature are made for it. In consequence of this notoriety the department is receiving many requests for seed.

The department states that this type of wheat has been known for many years both in this country and in Europe. It has been tried at several state experiment stations in the Western United States during the last 15 years, but nowhere have the yields been high enough to merit attention.

The wheat has grown to a limited extent on certain heavy undrained soils in France for many years. In such locations it is said to yield rather better than ordinary wheat, but as it is one of the poorest wheats known for making flour it is never grown where the ordinary varieties of wheat will thrive.

TO SHOW SPOKANE.

Moving Pictures of City and Surroundings at Seattle Fair.

The chamber of commerce committee in charge of Spokane county's exhibit at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition to be held in Seattle next year has entered into contract with James McConahey to provide moving pictures to be used in connection with the exhibits from this county, says the Review. Mr. McConahey will go to the Palouse country today to secure pictures of harvesting scenes.

The members of the irrigation committee appointed this week by the chamber of commerce to make efforts to have Spokane chosen as the seat of the irrigation congress to be held in the fall of 1909, have actively started the campaign. Correspondence has been opened with the commercial organizations of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana and California to enlist their support in behalf of the movement to bring the congress here.

L. G. Monroe, secretary of the chamber of congress, said: "Denver, Col. will be our only serious rival and we will have the advantage over that city in view of the fact that Spokane is on the route from eastern states to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific fair to be held in Seattle. Tickets from eastern points to Seattle will be good for a stopover in Spokane, and for that reason we have strong hopes of being able to bring the irrigation congress here."
