All the news all the time in the East Oregonian.

BIG ACREAGE TO BE SOLD UNDER KLAMATH PROJECT.

The Klamath Waterusers' association is about to inaugurate a campaign of advertising for the purpose of assisting landowners under the irrigation project to dispose of their excess lands. It is estimated that the excess acreage will reach about 40,000 acres, which, according to the contract with the government, must be sold within a few years.

The association is to give publicity to these lands throughout the agricultural districts of the east and middle west, thereby rendering the owners valuable assistance in the disposal of the excess holdings.

The Waterusers' association has also practically completed all arrangements by means of which the landowners under the system can take small contracts for the construction of laterals and portions of the canal, taking in payment script, which is the equivalent of cash in the payment of dues for water rights.

It is thought that through this plan most of the laterals of the system will be built by the landowners, who all have a few months of each year when they are not rushed with work on the farm.

Many of the ranchers will construct the laterals that are needed on their own lands, and others are figuring on going into the business on an extensive scale. It is thought that by this method the work can be done as cheaply as by contract or by force account, the farmers getting the benefit.
