MILLIONS SAVED BY PREVENTING COLORADO FROST

Grand Junction, Colo.—Two hundred thousand "smudge" pots watched through the night by an army of men, women and children, have probably saved the fruit crop of Grand Valley, estimated this year to be worth $3,000,000, from destruction. All during the night the country from Debeque and Palisade to Fruita and Loma was lit by the glare of the fire pots distributed throughout the orchards, practically every able-bodied man and scores of women and children in the fruit district staying up all night to replenish the fires. The valley resembled a huge charcoal bed. Outside the smudging districts the temperature fell as low as 20 degrees and orchards were badly damaged.

Cheap Lumber.

Buying Fever In Wool.
Boston, May 3.—A buying fever in wool is apparent. It is more in evidence in those sections where wool is to be obtained in quantity than in seaboard markets, where only casual supplies are available. Reports from the growing sections indicate that the competition of buyers is greater than at any previous period since the enactment of the Dingley duties on wool. The election of President McKinley in 1896 was followed by a scramble for wool because of the certainty of a tariff tax upon the product. The present fever is due to a threatened shortage in supply at the mills. It necessarily indicates a greater demand for manufactured goods than generally has been supposed to exist, and a more rapid consumption of raw material at the mills has been deemed possible. Contracting continues at a vigorous rate in all growing sections.
