"ROSES, ROSES, EVERYWHERE" IN PORTLAND FOR CARNIVAL

Portland.—Everything depends on the weather conditions for the next two weeks in regard to the quantity and quality of the roses for Rose Festival week, now distant only a fortnight, say rose growers who understand local conditions.

"The past three days have materially improved the prospect for the exhibit roses," said F. V. Holman this morning. "If we can have similar weather for the next two weeks we shall have such roses for exhibition purposes as we have not had for several years. All the prospects are for an abundance of common roses for decorative purposes unless we should have continued cool rains or sudden very hot weather to blight the buds and cook the foliage. The continued cool weather this spring has given the bushes splendid opportunity to develop and to build up strength, and the flowering in such cool weather produces unusually perfect and brilliant roses. I have not seen better prospects for roses for several years."

Other rosarians speak in similar vein of the fine prospects for an abundance of roses when the great civic celebration opens.

I picked the first bunch of roses of any considerable size from my bushes, about two dozen roses in all. The bushes are fairly alive with buds and if we can only have continued pleasant weather, days as warm as yesterday for instance, and also a few warm nights, we shall have more roses than we can take care of when June 7 arrives.

The supply may be a little short for Memorial day but the prospects for Rose Festival week are fine.

"And for another thing, the foliage is simply grand this year. There is a vigor, size and sturdiness about it that is magnificent. A number of visitors, some from eastern cities, were looking at my roses yesterday and they all expressed their wonder and admiration at the perfection of foliage that the bushes show. Nothing can spoil the chances for fine roses and lots of them except too hot weather, to blight and scorch the buds, or continued cold rains, to retard them. I think every prospect is for magnificent roses."

BODY OF LOST MAN FOUND AT KAMELA

La Grande, May 25.—A head, a portion of a human body, an overcoat, with the sleeves chewed off as if by wild animals, all of which is unquestionably all that is left of William Dye, who disappeared mysteriously from Kamela several months ago, were found yesterday about a quarter of a mile from the cabin near Kamela, where the man lived before his disappearance.

Justice of the Peace Stewart, deputy coroner, and Constable Faule left for Kamela this morning and held an inquest immediately upon their arrival.

The cause of Dye's death is not known, but that he was murdered seems probable, for when last seen he was leaving Pendleton after having cashed checks amounting to $200 or $300.

At the time of Dye's disappearance his creditors thought that he had absconded as his debts greatly exceeded his ability to pay. A few days ago a lot of wood that had belonged to the missing man was sold under attachment.

It is possible that the man became despondent and committed suicide, but so far as is known he had given no indication of despondency. Owing to the extreme state of decomposition in which the body was found, it is probable the coroner's jury will be unable to assign the cause of the death.—Observer.

TROUT SUPPER WAS ENJOYED

LOCAL ANGLERS AGREE
"BAIT" IS IMPORTANT

Joyous Gathering for First Annual Anglers' Banquet Last Evening at the Quelle—Toasts Show Much Interest in Various Subjects Regarding the Angler's Art.

That much depends upon the quantity of the "bait" was unanimously agreed at the anglers' banquet last evening. This conclusion was reached after a very thorough discussion of the subject of fishing those taking part in the discussion being men well qualified to speak upon the different phases of the subject.

The big "trout supper" was served in the little annex dining room at the Quelle and practically every seat was taken. However one distinguished fisherman was absent and his absence was much regretted by his comrades. This was C. K. Cranston, who was unable to attend the banquet because of illness.

As was to be expected the principal thing upon the menu list was trout and under the direction of Gus LaFontaine they were served to the "queen's taste." It had been rumored that the anglers had fallen down on the catch for the feed, but the number and quality of the trout served last night put the lie completely to the stories that had been afloat. There were trout of all descriptions and enough to feed a thousand men under ordinary circumstances.

After due honor had been done to the fish and other things upon the menu, cigars were served and with Mark Moorhouse as toastmaster a half hour or more was devoted to talking.

In response to the toast, "The Anglers' Association," G. I. LaDow, president of the organization, told of the work the local sportsmen have done in the past and of the plans they have for the future.

Sam Thompson was then called upon to respond to the subject of "Conveyances," and he gave some interesting information regarding an experience he had only recently.

Col. C. E. Roosevelt responded in a very able manner to the subject, "Bait," and demonstrated that he was thoroughly familiar with the subject.

O. F. Turner, deputy game warden, made a very interesting talk regarding the game laws and he also expressed a hope that the local sportsmen will be able to secure a fish hatchery for the Umatilla.

W. E. Brock was called upon to explain regarding the use of a cork when fishing in the local streams, and he did so in a very satisfactory manner.

W. P. Temple, who conducted a notable party of anglers to McKay creek yesterday, gave some interesting information regarding that trip and verified some wireless messages that had been received during the day from the party.

At the conclusion of the banquet it was intimated that other spreads will be held in the future for the purpose of promoting the bond of sociability between the anglers and to assist in improving local conditions for the sportsmen.
