Fun at the Grand. Laughing was a disease at the Grand theater last night. It was amateur night and they packed the house to the sidewalks. The first prize went to Jesse Day. Special mention must be made of Goldie Nagel and George Hackelthorn, who went through the work splendidly. Professor Bloomfield wants it said that the sextette is all in readiness for next Tuesday and the cakewalkers have all got their work down fine, too. Sunday, being the last night, will be a free-for-all to enter into the contest. The cake will be presented Sunday night to the winner, so get your partners and do some big practicing. Beauty in Gold, Silver and Glass. as in all other articles, depends on the artistic taste displayed in the manufacture. No matter what beautiful or precious metals may be used in the manufacture, if the taste is lacking, there is no beauty in the result. We have always borne this fact in mind in the selection of our goods, and the result is that the artistic element enters into even our most inexpensive pieces of Jewelry, Silverware and Cut Glass. LOYAL TO UNION EVEN AT WEDDING

Because the marriage certificate offered him did not bear the union label a former Pendleton linotype operator refused to accept it. The man in question is C. C. Clinton, who worked in this city for a short time several years. The account of his bold stand is contained in the following dispatch from Hutchinson, Kansas, where he was recently married: "When it came to a choice between his trade union and his prospective bride, Coleman C. Clinton, a linotype operator of Portland, Ore., chose the former here today, and had it not been for the anxiety of Probate Judge Jordan to please, the marriage ceremony might not have been performed. Clinton absolutely refused to be married when the marriage certificate promised to be without a union label. Clinton yesterday secured a license to wed Miss Ethel Johnson. He had come from Portland to make her his bride. Probate Judge Jordan has lately received some fancy marriage certificates from the east and he was about to use one of these, when Clinton noticed the lack of a union label and balked. Another certificate was secured and the ceremony was performed."

The Crying Question. As the Frazled Oats magnate wandered gloomily down the street, he came upon a wooden-legged man crying softly. "How now, good friend," said the magnate. "Your trouble?" "I have been reading a speech in congress about the timber supply. When the wood is all gone, where will I get a new leg?" "My friend," said the magnate, softly, "I was just wondering the same thing about my oats."
