INSURGENTS AWAIT AN ISSUE BEFORE BEGINNING BATTLE ON CZAR CANNON

Washington.—"Wanted—An Issue. By thirty or more insurgent members of the House of Representatives, issue must be squarely upon the rules and guaranteed not to endanger members' standing at the White House. Some sure method of taking the gavel away from Speaker Cannon preferred. Any issue acceptable that will give the country at large an idea that the insurgents are fearlessly fighting Czar rules and a Czar ruler."

An advertisement like the above may be inserted in the daily papers one of these days unless the insurgent leaders of the House find the issue they are looking for nearer the House of Representatives than they have discovered up to date. If they can find the issue, they assert, they can very quickly get enough votes to overthrow the rules, speaker and all.

"An issue is really all we are waiting for at present," said Victor Murdock of Kansas, who is the recognized leader of the insurgent forces. "It must be squarely upon the rules or we cannot do business. Some suggestion has been made that we agree upon the postal savings bank as an inviting plank to stand upon, but there is too much opposition to that scheme for us to hope to do anything with it. So it looks as though there was nothing to do but wait until the rules themselves can be attacked, then to go ahead and overthrow the speaker.

"As far as I am personally concerned, I am against Cannonism in particular and in general. I intend to keep on fighting the speaker until I get him. Some of the other folks, however, balk at the idea of making a personal attack on Cannon, so the best thing we can do is to wait until we can all get together."

A Delicate Situation.

The House insurgents are confronted by two dangers while they are engaged in their effort to overthrow Uncle Joe. In the first place, if they are not successful they are very likely to lose whatever influence they have in the House because of inability to secure recognition from the powers controlling that body; and, second, they may "lose out" with the President for opposing legislation that the administration wants enacted. There are a lot of postmasters to be appointed this session.

What makes the situation of a good many insurgents all the more ticklish is the fact that their constituents at home demand a fearless attitude of them and expect to see their representatives personally twist the tail of power every time they read the home papers. Many of them were elected upon an anti-Cannon platform and when they come up for reelection next fall, they may have to do some strenuous explaining to hold their jobs.

Although the insurgents have held a number of meetings since their organization under the against-the-rules banner last winter, they have not yet been able to formulate any very definite plan of campaign. It is probable that a number of them will take the stump next summer, to assist in the primary fights of would-be congressmen who will promise, if elected, to strengthen the insurgent forces. By so doing, they may add to their ranks next session when they think they will have more of a chance really to do things.

The one point on which all the insurgents are agreed is that the speaker has too much power under the present rules. Naturally the element of personalities enters into the fight when even such an abstract thing as the rules themselves are being fought, and so Speaker Cannon is the storm center. That Uncle Joe has exercised the power given him under the rules, and right vigorously, is not denied by even the most rigid "organization" adherent. In fact the speaker himself is willing enough to say that he wields the gavel to suit himself and the best interests of the party as he sees the most interests to be.

"The moment that the majority of the House wants me to step down, I'll step down," he has said more than once. "It is ridiculous to say that the House as a whole, or a majority, is opposed to me. My gavel is in my hands only by sufferance and can be taken from them at any moment the majority indicates the wish."

The supporters of the present rules assert that the end sought by the insurgents would be fatal to wise legislation. "They want the House run under the same rules as the Senate," said one of the organization supporters, "but if those rules were in force they would be the first to demand that they be changed. In the Senate they have unlimited debate. How much business, do you suppose, would the House ever accomplish with every member able to talk as long as he chose? Why, we'd never get anything through and the sessions would last throughout the years."

SUSCEPTIBLE MONARCH ADEPT IN ADMIRATION

London.—Two beautiful actresses do not speak as they pass by, owing to the recent visit of King Manuel of Portugal. They are Lily Elsie and Gabrielle Ray, both beauties playing in "The Dollar Princess" at Daly's theater.

King Manuel visited Daly's three times and confessed to his suite his deepest admiration for Miss Elsie, but it was not known that the youthful monarch had also fervent eyes for the equally and some contend, the more beautiful Miss Ray of the same company. King Manuel gave a chic private supper party at which Elsie thought she was the star, but who should appear but the pretty Gaabrielle, with such an air of being sure that the supper party was in her particular honor that Miss Elsie left in high dudgeon.

As both women have a battalion of adherents, there is a merry war at Daly's. Meanwhile the bewhiskered diplomats of the foreign offices are chuckling and say that King Manuel certainly has the making of a great diplomatist if he can make two women in the same company believe he is desperately in love with them.

ROSE MELVILLE, THE ORIGINAL SIS HOPKINS

One of the oddest characters on the stage today is that of Obadiah, the undertaker's assistant, in Sis Hopkins, which comes to the Oregon on Wednesday, January 5. Obadiah is a clumsy sort of a rustic type whose one idea in life is to get ready for prospective victims. He goes about with a tape measure and dreams of death and disaster. The gossip which tells him of the illness of the oldest inhabitant or the ailments of the countryside people, brings joy to his soul and he keeps track of what the village physician is doing. He wears the most funereal garments, and yet he is funny. Not contented with merely being a general calamity howler, he prepared the epitaphs for his neighbors and their recitation is one of the brightest laughing spots in the play. Obadiah is one of the cleverest character studies on the stage today. This is Miss Melville's eleventh season as Sis Hopkins, the odd Posey county girl who wears funny little red celluloid side combs, gingham pinafore, striped stockings, the like of which have not been seen in more than a decade and those curious panella gaiters which were the fashion in the late seventies and the early eighties. She wears her hair in two tight little pigtails.

KANSAS CITY, KAN., AFTER KANSAS CITY, MO.

Kansas City, Kan., Jan. 1.—By the annexation today of Argentine this city increased its population to 111,389. Further extension of one mile west is contemplated and the rosters say that the population on this side of the river will soon outnumber that of the city of the same name on the Missouri side.

Forbids Checks Under $1.

Washington, Jan. 1.—Charles D. Norton, acting secretary of the treasury, has asked law officers of the government to give an opinion as to the construction to be put upon the provision in the penal code of the United States, which forbids the issuance of checks for amounts less than one dollar. The new law goes into effect today.

Business firms say the new law will mean the substitution of postage stamps, subsidiary coins and post-office money orders in lieu of the bank checks.

Lavish entertainment of this district will be a feature of the convention and plans to give the delegates a good time are already under way. A committee, headed by W. B. Mackay, has this feature in charge. An elaborate banquet is on the program and trips to the sawmill plants near the city, excursions on the harbor, and probably a jaunt to a logging camp in the timber not far from Portland are promised.
