The company could not think of developing an expensive power plant merely to provide power for street cars to be operated in Pendleton and suburbs. The interurban lines will be the money makers.

a new era in this city. A renaiss- the project, ance. During the past few years Pendieton has been quiet in some respects. A spirit of pessimism has prevailed. This has been especially noticeable among the heavy property owners. These men have acted in a peculiar manner. They have acted like a child who, having a headache, refuses all comfort, and asks only to be allowed to die. But the great majority of the people of this city are not of the pessimistic type. They have not lost heart. On the contrary they have faith in Pendleton and faith in their Pendleton, ability to make the town better. The East Oregonian has been with these people heart and soul. It has continually encouraged them and led them forward. It counselled them to ful administration or ever will. A put an end to croaking and to rely great president must develop and exupon self help.
