BIG DEMONSTRATION TRAIN ON ITS WAY

PASSED THROUGH THIS CITY LAST EVENING

Reached Here at 7 Yesterday and Left for Baker City at 11—Great Interest Manifested at Love and Heppner—Livestock Is Special Feature.

The $10,000 demonstration train of the O. R. & N. passed through Pendleton last night on its way to Baker City. Heppner and Ione on the Heppner branch, were visited yesterday and today stops will be made at Baker, Haines and North Powder.

The train arrived in Pendleton at 7 o'clock and was held here until 11 before continuing its journey to the furthest point east it will make. The train will also remain over night here Thursday night and Friday it will be here from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 7:30 the next morning when it will leave for Pilot Rock.

Those in charge of the train report great interest both at Heppner and Ione. The train arrived at Heppner at 3 o'clock and notwithstanding the early hour a number of farmers had gathered from the surrounding country. But the interest was not confined alone to the tillers of the soil for professional and business men turned out. Never has such interest been displayed in Morrow county before and regardless of vocations, the people seemed to be thoroughly aroused to the virtue of more scientific cultivation of the soil.

The livestock features of the train attracted more than ordinary attention, because this part of Morrow county has from its early history been a large producer of cattle, sheep and horses.

Promptly at the appointed hour A. A. Morse, who has charge of the train, introduced Dr. James Withycombe, director of the Oregon Agricultural college, made a short talk regarding dry farming and conservation of moisture.

The lectures were all brief, preceding the opening of the train, but extensive in the explanation of the ap-

STOMACH MISERY FOR OVER SIX YEARS

Read what Mr. Hoffman, landlord of the Webster Hotel, writes.

"I suffered misery and intense pains from stomach trouble for over six years, and all the doctoring that I did or medicines I used were of no avail until about two years ago, when I used a treatment of Mi-o-na. The first few days' treatment helped me greatly and upon using it a while I was made entirely free from any stomach trouble or complaint whatever. Since the cure by Mi-o-na I have regained my weight, I eat and sleep well, am never nervous and my entire general health is much better."

—Max M. Hoffman, Webster, N. Y., August 2, 1909.

KEEPING STEP.

Modern business men must strike the modern pace. Opportunity changes her password every day. The world is whirling four times as fast as it used to. A few misguided astronomers may try to dispute the fact, but they are living among the stars.

The man who doesn't keep in step with the "hour" must drop out of line. There's no room for him. The man behind him is waiting and straining and watching to leap in and take his post.

The world is playing a new game—the man is his own admittance price—he cannot enter the contest on a borrowed ticket—he cannot pass with a borrowed name. What his father was is a part of history. We have no time to climb out on the branches of a genealogical tree. We don't care what the tree was or what fruit it bore—its past crops can't help us—we can't use them—we want to see what sort of fruit it's bearing now. The era of vested privilege—of inherited prestige are buried with the type of man who made them. We are making precedent now—not following it.

The twentieth century finds the world peopled with genii and magi, whose exploits make the second rate efforts of Alladin and the slaves of the Lamp, toy plays. Instead of a pair of seven-league boots, we have space condensers that whirl us across a dozen states in a night. We're learning to use wings—we walk on the ocean beds—ride upon and beneath the sea—we build towering palaces of steel and marble every month.

The precepts and examples of the past—the systems and methods of our fathers are becoming as useless as their cannon.

The man of today must have a longer reach.

Information soon becomes obsolete in an age in which improvement dismantles more machinery than wear and tear—which sets up a creed one week and upsets it the next—which creates a genius yesterday and changes his laurel wreath to a fool's cap tomorrow.

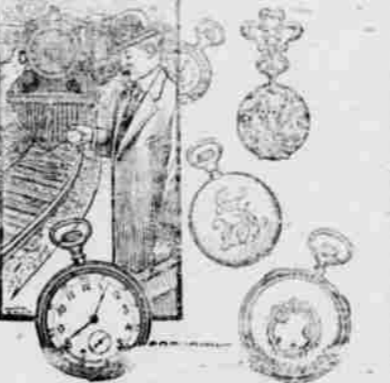

No man is secure who feels a sense of security. The only safe goal is the horizon—to win one must keep constantly going. We're planning how to reach Mars and how to dig down to the furnaces of Vulcan—we have already learned to chat over four thousand miles of distance. A thousand laboratories are tearing from nature her manufacturing secrets—reproducing her foods and providing for a possible future in which a factory will take the place of wheat field and stock farm—Herbert Kaufman.

It is difficult to tell which most embarrasses a man, his first tete-a-tete with a woman whom he is just beginning to love, or his last tete-a-tete with the woman he has just ceased loving.

Man wants but little here below, but woman wants all she can get below cost.

AT THE THEATER.

"The Lion and the Mouse," "The Lion and the Mouse," undoubtedly the best play Pendleton has seen this season, was presented in a very satisfactory manner to a large audience at the Oregon last night. The play itself is too well-known for it to be necessary to say that it is a real American drama, full of vitality and action and with the leading characters strongly depicted.

With two important exceptions the roles were exceptionally well sustained. Walter Edwards as "John Burckett Ryder" the captain of finance and political boss, was about all that could reasonably be expected, but Charles D. Pitt as "Jefferson Ryder, son of the multimillionaire, was undoubtedly the poorest of the entire cast. He was stiff and awkward, and any school boy could give him pointers on making love or defying the "stern parent."

Charles H. Brunbridge as Senator Roberts, acted the part of the typical "regular" politician to the satisfaction of all, while the other characters, while not so strong as these, were all well taken.

The entire play was teeming with life and action, the stage setting was in harmony with the air of the drama and altogether it was the most satisfactory of the season.
