ADVOCATES THE ONE YEAR NORMAL COURSE

SUPT. POWERS OF SALEM ADDRESSES NORMAL SECTION

Subject is "Value of One-Year High School Normal Course"—Points out Merits of Such a Course—In Some Cases Inadvisable.

One of the interesting addresses of the present teachers' convention was the one by Prof. J. M. Powers, city superintendent of the Salem schools before the normal school section on "The value of the one-year high school normal course."

While greatly impressed with the success which has attended the introduction of the course in the Salem and Baker City high schools, Superintendent Powers said the establishment of the course depended somewhat upon the local conditions surrounding the individual school. For instance he thought the normal course might not be necessary if a good normal school was close at hand. He did believe, however, that if the locality is far distant from a normal school, as in some parts of Oregon, that such a course is advisable, perhaps necessary.

He said the course may be said to have the following values:

- It affords the same mental discipline as other studies.
- Since 80 per cent of all young people marry, and since 75 per cent of these have children, this course would prepare the parent for a better understanding of the principles and processes of education and enhance the parents' interest in the school.
- It will prepare for better teaching in rural schools where better advantages are impossible, or not conveniently accessible.
- It may encourage many high school students to continue and round out their training for teaching in the regular state normal schools.

In substantiation of his contentions, Superintendent Powers frequently referred to illustrations in his own school at Salem and in the one at Baker City.

CROW, THE FARMERS' FRIEND.

With the Exception of One Month He Works for the Rancher.

Washington.—"The crow is a much abused bird and it is time that someone said a good word for his old black coat," remarked Dr. C. Hart Merriam, chief of the biological survey.

"Instead of being an enemy of the farmer, as is generally believed," continued Dr. Merriam, "the crow is one of his best friends and the protector of his crops. True, during corn planting time, the crow's bill is turned against the farmer—during one month and that month only, he is his enemy. But the other eleven months the crow is really working overtime for him. It eats thousands upon thousands of destructive insects and bugs every week and when it comes to feeding its young, gives them a diet composed almost entirely of worms and insects that prey upon the crops."

"Therefore, it makes me righteously indignant every time I see any one try to kill a crow. These trials, however, are not very often crowned with success, for the crow has become one of the wisest of wild creatures as the result of hundreds of years of persecution and misunderstanding. The value of many of our birds is unfortunately unknown to the farmers whom they are striving so hard to protect. The oriole, for instance, is the only bird that will eat the fuzzy caterpillars which are so destructive to many varieties of trees. Were it not for the woodpeckers there would be no forests, for they go after and keep down the enormous numbers of worms that attack the trees."

"The only bird that I would really be glad to see destroyed in this country is the English sparrow. He is utterly worthless to the farmer or the orchard owner; he is dirty, quarrelsome and drives away the song birds. Just at present the survey is striving with all its might and main to keep him out of southern California. So far we have been successful in this battle. If the people of the cities and villages would only take up the crusade against this little pest, they might easily get rid of him, and the beautiful song birds would come back. The sparrow is easily trapped and easily poisoned; but every time an organized effort is made to rid a locality of the nuisance, the crusaders are met with the mistaken sentimentality of a few who know nothing about the merits of the case, and are scared off by the cry of 'Save the little birds' that is set up in the papers and from the pulpit. The English sparrow has no more right to exist than rats, mice, scorpions, tarantulas, or any other noxious creatures that are recognized as enemies of our society."
