"The Bravest Girl in the South." Drama. 1000 feet. One of those thrilling stories filled with emotion and the exhibition of bravery. Such films are scarcely susceptible to criticism.

"Silence." Dramatic. A pictorial representation of De Musset's well known story.

"The Greenhorns." Comedy.

Pendleton Dog Is Winner.

Though few are aware of it, Pendleton is the home of one of the finest bull terriers in the state. L. G. Terry, the traveling salesman, is the fancier who owns the animal which is christened Silletto Guard. In the bench show of the Portland Kennel club held last week in the metropolis, Mr. Terry's terrier captured two prizes, first in the "limit," and second in the "open dogs." By winning this latter ribbon, Silletto Guard won the distinction of being the second best bull terrier in the state. Willamette Defender who won first prize, was sired by the grand sire of Mr. Terry's dog, Silletto Guard is a beautiful white terrier with a pedigree that gives him undigested rank in the dog aristocracy of the country. His father was Willamette Peer and his mother Merrill D., both of which animals are famed for their blue blood.

The Drug Store That Serves You Best.

Washington late in October, where he met President Buchanan and spent several days in the White House. He visited other places of interest in the east and sailed for home from Portland, Me. The following year he again traveled on the continent of Europe and later spent some time in Egypt and the Holy Land.

His Marriage.

While on this visit to Europe the Prince of Wales met the Princess Alexandra of Denmark and their betrothal was announced Sept. 8, 1862. The wedding ceremony took place in St. George's chapel at Windsor, March 10 of the following year, and the prince and his wife furnished an establishment at Sandringham, Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, was the first child, born in 1864. He died in 1892. The other children in the order named were Prince George of Wales, born 1865; Princess Louise, Duchess of Fife, born 1867; Princess Victoria, born 1868; Princess Maud, Queen of Norway, born 1869, and Prince Alexander, who was born in 1871 and died the same year.

Ireland received a visit from the Prince of Wales and his wife five years after they were married, and in 1868 they traveled extensively through the east, returning through Russia. The prince made his memorable visit to India in 1875.

The death of William I. of Germany caused the celebration of the Prince and Princess' silver anniversary to be a quiet one. The eldest daughter, Princess Louise, was married to the Earl of Fife in 1889. The Prince (figured at a witness in the famous Accair case in 1891. The Princess Maud of Wales was married to Prince Charles of Denmark in 1894 and in 1896 they became King and Queen of Norway.

Ascends the Throne.

Upon the death of Queen Victoria in 1901 the Prince of Wales assumed the title of King Edward VII. With Queen Alexandra he was crowned with great ceremony in Westminster Abbey, August 9, 1902. On the eve of the date originally fixed for the coronation, which was earlier in the summer, the King suffered an attack of illness and was obliged to undergo a serious operation. For a time it was feared his life was in danger. As a ruler the King displayed the same tact and political sagacity that had distinguished him for so many years as Prince of Wales.

All his life long his majesty was a champion of outdoor sport, and each year his stable carried away a list of English turf. In 1900, while still Prince of Wales, he headed the list of winning owners, gaining the "triple crown" by capturing the Derby, the St. Leger and the Two Thousand Guinea races. His winnings and his influence did much to make the English turf freer from fraud than that of any other racing country in the world.

That king was deeply interested in both domestic and foreign politics every one knew. As Prince of Wales he frequently visited the house of lords and there were few more attentive listeners to the debates.

Was High Mason.

King Edward was the most prominent living Free Mason. For more than thirty-five years he was identified with the order, during which time he served as grandmaster of the grand lodges of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and also grand prior of the order of Knights Templars in England and grand patron of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite of Free Masonry in the United Kingdom, having received the 32d and last degree in that branch of Free Masonry. There was not a member throughout the world who took a deeper or more active interest in the answers to her message announcing the opening of the Crimean war were read.

Traveled Extensively.

As Prince of Wales his Majesty traveled extensively. At the age of 7 he journeyed to Ireland for the first time, and in 1855 visited Paris with his parents and the princess royal. With his tutor the prince walked through the west of England incognito when 14 years old, and later visited for some time in Germany. Many journeys to all parts of the continent were taken, the prince generally going incognito under the name of Baron Renfred. The prince decided to visit Canada and the United States in 1860. Arriving at St. John's he visited Niagara Falls and traveled west to Chicago, where he was met enthusiastically, although he followed his custom of using the name of Baron Renfred. The prince went from Chicago to St. Louis and arrived in affairs of the Masonic order. Masonry everywhere received his hearty and unqualified support and his presence at important Masonic functions was always sought for and usually with success.

From the time of his marriage he was the leading figure in English society and to a great extent its arbiter. Possessed of unrivaled and unflinching tact, of an extremely level head, and of an altogether unique knowledge of the intricate politics of the day, his majesty's position as Prince of Wales and as king endowed him with a social power superior to that enjoyed by any continental sovereign.

Secured Social Reforms.

The English people are indebted to King Edward for many reforms, brought about by him in his role as social arbiter, and which afforded an excellent indication of his character. It is thanks to him for instance, that hard drinking and coarseness of language went out of fashion. When he was a boy it was considered bad form for a gentleman to refuse to rest otherwise than intoxicated, while almost every phrase spoken was embellished with appalling blasphemy. And if a higher tone of morality and a greater sense of propriety now prevail than in the earlier half of the 19th century, it is in a great measure due to the unobtrusive but excellent care which his majesty took to keep out of society those who had forfeited their right to remain within its pale. He was as ready as any votary of pleasure to meet them in the sphere to which they had descended, and to treat them there with kindness and consideration, but he would not tolerate their presence in houses that were respectable, and took quiet means to eliminate them therefrom.

Happy Home Life.

One of the most pleasing traits of King Edward was his singularly happy home life. He was the object of many stories of a more or less slanderous nature, which he always considered beneath his dignity to deny or refute. But it was only necessary to see the king among his family at Sandringham, and to observe the affection with which his nephews and success spoke of "Uncle Bertie," to realize that much that was spoken and written about him was absolutely false.

It is believed that King Edward leaves little personal estate. From the time he attained his majority he had lived in a more or less extravagant manner and had never cultivated that frugality which enabled his mother, the late Queen Victoria, to be rated among the world's richest women. King Edward was liberal with his family and his friends and oftentimes found it difficult to make both ends meet out of the royal allowance.
