GEORGE BERNARD SHAW SCORES PRESS SNOBBERY

London—George Bernard Shaw, with his usual courage, is the only man in all England who has dared raise his voice against the almost incredible snobbishness of the English press on the occasion of the recent death of King Edward; which was almost too much for royalty itself.

In an article on the late king, in which Shaw says that Edward was popular because he was more of a man than a king, he writes:

"You cannot make a man a king and then know anything about him.

The divinity that derges a king is, in the last analysis, a general agreement to pretend that he is what no man ever yet was; and just man made perfect. A king, in short, is an idol; that is why I am a republican. I know as well as anyone that if you have an idol, you had better have disputes about the succession by making the post hereditary instead of elective.

"But why should any human being be made a political convenience of to this extent? Has not the king an indefensible right to a man, and not an idol. Why should Queen Mary, the proud mother of five strong sons, be forced to bring them up to a decaying trade and an unhappy lot?"

"Let the coronation be at Stonehenge, not at Westminster Abbey. London, with its mighty traffic, is no longer a place where pageants can be tolerated. The propaganda of royalism which is the purpose of these pageants need not suffer; far more people will see them on Salisbury Plain than can be wedged behind the troops in Piccadilly, and the cinematograph will work all the better in the open."

POLICE PREVENT WEDDING.

Flashy Dresser With Girl But Her Brother Digs Up Past Record.

Denver, Colo.—On the eve of his wedding to a pretty 17-year-old West Side girl, William Cherry, claiming to be a diamond salesman, but said by the police to be a macqueran of the worst type, was arrested by Detectives Kearney and Sanders. Such are the features of the case that Chief Armstrong will file information against Cherry under the anti-macqueran law and make a determined effort to send the man to the penitentiary.

Some time ago Cherry made the acquaintance of the girl. The police are keeping her name a secret. Cherry, a good dresser and smooth talker, had no trouble in gaining her confidence. His conduct was above reproach and when a few weeks ago he proposed marriage to the girl, he was accepted. The wedding was set for last Saturday.

Then reports about the man's character reached a brother of the girl. Quietly he made an investigation and later appealed to the police. Detectives Sanders and Kenney were detailed upon the case and the prospective bridegroom's arrest followed.

The police say they have indisputable evidence that Cherry is a macqueran and for some time has been living off the earnings of a woman.

Cherry is 27 years of age and has lived in Denver for some time.
