

In Pendleton--Every Careful Shopper Keeps in Touch With Alexanders--It Pays Alexander's Great August Clearance Sale

Must make room for mammoth fall stock already coming in

All Kinds of This Seasons Merchandise in Full and Broken Lines to Select From at Greater Reductions.

The August Clearance Sale

ALL through July the work of clearing summer stocks of odd lots and broken assortments has been going on vigorously. Now comes the August clearance sale, in which every vestige of summer merchandise must find a new owner, for as those who are acquainted with Alexander's Department Store well know, it is not the store's policy to carry seasonable merchandise from one year to the next.

Price concessions in all lines of summer goods are now most liberal, and from day to day the lots will grow considerably less.

Those who come early in the sale have the advantage of better assortments on this account.

Today's advertisement can tell of only a part of this store's offerings, and the same will be true of other advertisements that follow during the sale. Many choice things, especially in small lots, will be advertised only by the sign cards that mark their display.

Late summer and early fall needs can be supplied now at notably small cost, and in some instances it will even pay to buy for next spring's use if present needs are supplied.

STANDPATTERS ARE DENOUNCED

there I hope they will be buried forever. All that was good in the bill was carefully preserved, and all that was bad was either wholly rejected or materially modified.

Remade the Bill.
With the introduction of the bill there began such a struggle as has been rarely witnessed between the forces of progress and reaction. The progressive republicans did not get all they wanted, nor all they ought to have had, but they succeeded in converting a measure which in its original form would have been a long step backward into a measure that is a gratifying step forward.

We earnestly contended that no increases in rates should hereafter go into effect until approved by the commission. This seems fair and just, inasmuch as the carriers made the rates that are now in force, and it may, therefore, be assumed that they are remunerative.

We failed in that effort, but as a substitute for it, it was provided that the commission can suspend new rates for a period of ten months, and that in all hearings as to the reasonableness of rates the burden of proof shall rest upon the railway companies.

We insisted that no injunction restraining an order of the commission should be issued without notice, and that there should be the right of appeal from any such injunction. The bill was so amended.

We contended that the shipper who had complained to the interstate commerce commission, and had won his case, should have the right to appear in any suit that was brought by the railway companies to annul his victory. It is now in the law.

We urged that no greater jurisdiction over the interstate commerce commission should be conferred upon the commerce court than is now exercised by the circuit courts, and the bill was so amended.

We kept the anti-trust law intact. We remembered that it had dissolved two vicious traffic associations; that it had annihilated the Northern Securities company; that it had decreed the death of the American Tobacco company, and, finally, had sent the terror of disintegration into the ranks of the Standard Oil company, and we did not intend to see its vigor impaired or its scope narrowed until something better could be enacted in its stead.

We attempted, with all the strength we had, to put into the bill a fair and effectual provision which would have prevented the issuance of stocks and bonds without full compensation, and that would have rendered impossible hereafter the exhibitions of dishonesty and extravagance that have so started the world in the last few years in railway capitalization.

Wall Street Interests.
Certain republicans who are enamored with the manipulations of Wall street, joining themselves with certain democrats who found no authority in the constitution for such legislation, defeated our amendment. We are not, however, without hope, for under the recommendation of the president a provision was adopted which will insure an immediate investigation of the subject, and we may shortly be more successful in our efforts to regulate railway stocks and bonds.

Upon the whole, the republican party is to be congratulated upon the bill as it became a law. It is a step in the right direction, and ultimately we will reach the end toward which all parties are striving.

I trust I will not be accused of any desire to stir up factional feeling for it not been for the progressive republicans in the senate, men who have been derided throughout the country as insurgents, the bill would have passed the senate as it came from the pen of the attorney general, and the republican party would have staggered along in this campaign under a burden too heavy for any party to successfully carry.

Postal Banks.
Our platform of 1908 committed the party to the establishment of postal savings institutions. It is probably true that Iowa needed such facilities for saving less than any other state in the union but nevertheless, I am convinced that the policy is a wise one.

There are many parts of the country in which the banks are neither so numerous nor so near the people as they are in Iowa, and whatever we can do to encourage and stimulate habits of saving and thrift we ought to do.

The law passed by congress has, in my opinion two serious defects which ought to be removed at the earliest practicable moment.

First, we have given to the board of trustees, which is to manage the postal depositories, the discretion to designate such postoffices as it sees fit. This discretion will be a never ending irritation. It goes without saying that the banks in any community will not favor the designation of the postoffice in that community as a depository. It will be saying, as I am bound to say, that had natural for the banks to resist because the depositories are in a sense, competitors in business. Therefore, the board will be from the beginning the focal point of all the political influence that the banks can arouse and direct.

The law should be amended so that depositories are selected by some standard, either of population or of business, which could be applied inflexibly to the whole country.

Second, the most serious objection to the law will be found in the disposition of the money after it is gathered at the postoffices. Until a few weeks before the bill passed it had never been suggested that the money taken in at the postoffice was, under any circumstances, to be removed from the communities in which it was gathered, except as it went out under the ordinary laws of commerce and trade.

The subject has been considered by more than one postmaster general, bills had been introduced, and reports made by committees, but it had never been intimated that it would be wise to withdraw and invest them in government bonds. Our platform was bottomed upon the fundamental idea that the money put in the postoffices should not be withdrawn by the government from that community.

The power of the east over the west in controlling the supply of money is already too great, and what we have done will add immeasurably to the eastern influence.

Protect Country Banks.

In my judgment, if we want to popularize postal savings depositories, and allow them to fulfill the purposes we have had in view, we must speedily amend the law so that the country banks will not be injured, and so that money will be permitted to perform its full functions in the localities to which it naturally flows.

In this connection I must be permitted to dwell upon the proposition for a central bank. It will soon be a live question in American politics, and it is high time that republicans should give it that frigid consideration which in the end settles all public problems. Leaders may fret and fume about it; they may write books about it; committees and commissions may sit upon it; the Congressional Record may be filled with pages concerning it, but finally the quiet reflection of the farm and factory; the shop and store, the street corner and the roadside will enter the judgment.

The proposal has not yet taken definite form, but it is in the air that a central bank shall be established with the sole power of issuing paper money and of determining therefore how much money at any given time we shall have, and how it shall be distributed.

I do not say that I will oppose a central bank but I do say that I will oppose any bank with the powers that I have described, for if that misfortune should befall us we would suffer a financial slavery more complete even than the industrial servitude which now afflicts us.

In the consolidation of the great banks now in progress we see the preparation of such a condition. Already a dozen men, or less, can exert an influence which makes the country tremble in apprehension of their mighty strength, and if we permit them to enlarge their authority we will richly deserve the subjugation which will follow.

KITCHENER OUT OF ARMY.

Seeks Residence for Ensuing Period of Idleness.

London.—Lord Kitchener is quite reconciled to a period of idleness from military employment and is now seeking a house where he can take up his permanent residence. This will be somewhere within easy reach of London, and will be surrounded by large gardens. One of Kitchener's favorite pastimes is gardening, and he hopes to be able to give full play to this in the future.

He also proposes to provide a permanent home for his large and extremely valuable collection of old china. This collection is especially rich in specimens of eastern pottery ware, and received some considerable additions when he visited China and Japan a short time ago. So soon as he has obtained his house Lord Kitchener proposes to have this collection systematically catalogued and valued by experts. Beyond obtaining this house he has absolutely no plans for the future; but some years ago he informed a group of friends that in the event of his ever being without military employment he might turn to the city for something with which to occupy his mind and his time; and it may be that this is what he will now do.

TREASURE IS FOUND IN OLD SPANISH CASTLE

Lisbon.—A great find of treasure has been made at Alcazaba. Centuries ago a castle was built to defend the town against the Moorish invaders. Recently the tower fell and some of the stones buried a house, killing two of the occupants and injuring seven others.
Thereupon the authorities decided to demolish the castle, and during excavations in the deep dungeons a number of skeletons, evidently prisoners who had died in goal, were brought to light. Two iron chests were also unearthed and they were found to be full of old Spanish and Portuguese gold and silver coins. At the bottom of the chest were a number of gold and silver bars. The whole is estimated to be worth over $150,000.

IN THE SOUTH.

The class was having a lesson in geography and was learning the points of the compass.
"Now, Tommy Jones," said the teacher, "you have in front of you the north, on your right the east, on your left the west. What have you behind you?"
After a moment's reflection Tommy explained:
"A patch on my trousers."
And to make the information more binding Tommy continued in a shamefaced manner:
"I knew you'd see it. I told mother you would."

NEWS OF THE DAY FROM HERMISTON
