The True Economy of

THE Gossard CORSETS

"They Lace In Front"

SAYS Mrs. Black, "Five Dollars is more than I have been paying for my corsets. It would be an extravagance."

That's wrong—and we'll show you why.

To begin with, it is not fair or right to yourself to call anything an extravagance that benefits you immensely in a beauty way—a health way—as the Gossard Corset does.

You cannot count in dollars what it means to a woman who has proper pride in her appearance, to have a smooth and shapely habit back over which her gowns fit as though molded to the arch of her spine, without a wrinkle—

WALLA WALLA WHEAT MARKET NOT LIVELY

RANCHERS ARE HOLDING FOR HIGHER PRICES

Buying of California Millers Tightens Hold of Farmers—Fall Seeding in Progress—Much Less Stubble Will Be Turned Under Than Was Supposed.

Walla Walla, Wash.—Following the extraordinary activity of the wheat market last week, this has been an exceptionally quiet one, and prices, while they have strengthened a trifle, have not been raised enough to attract any growers to part with their grain.

The few sales made during the week were very quiet, and the natural reticence of the buyer to make known his deals has become so marked that it is almost impossible to get hold of the deals, even after they have been made.

The buying by California millers was the direct cause of the tightening of the hold the farmers are keeping on their grain. When it became known that already the southern millers are bidding for grain from this region, the farmers argued that there must be enough of a shortage to cause real boosting of the prices. So they are holding again to see.

Fall Seeding Going Ahead. Fall seeding is being pushed as fast as possible. In the vicinity of this city this is quite rapid, and much seed is going into the soil. The ground is in excellent shape, the early rains having done their work in bringing up the weeds, which are now being killed just as the seed is being put in. And in the foothill country grain is being rapidly sown.

In the lower valley, however, near Touchet, Eureka and Slater, there has been little or no rainfall. The few showers that have fallen have not yet laid the dust, and the ground in the summer fallowed fields is so dry that a weed could not possibly sprout. And it is in this country that the weeds are the worst, so little seeding, if any at all, is being done.

It is estimated that there will be less than 25,000 acres of land turned from stubble this year by spring sowing. Farmers are loath to make their fields produce two years running, and the two year in three theory has just about been abandoned. Thus the original estimate of 300,000 acres in grain this year, in Walla Walla county, will have to be cut down. It was thought there would be about 50,000 acres plowed this fall for spring sowing, but this will not be the case. There is probably about 250,000 acres of summer fallow, and to this may be added about 15,000, or even only 10,000 acres of fall plowed spring grain. The dry weather is also another cause for this, for unless the fall rains set in immediately there will be no opportunity to do fall plowing. For while the ground is in good condition for seeding, it lacks a great deal of being moist enough to turn from the mouldboard.

The acreage of wheat this year will also be slightly affected by the numerous fruit farms being planted about the valley. While these are all small, compared with the wheat ranches adjoining, they are becoming so frequent that it will only be a question of time until they will materially reduce the wheat yield in the Walla Walla valley.

For instance, one fruit farm of 600 acres, that of J. W. Langdon, near this city, is taking the place of wheat that used to be sowed on the same ground. In the Dayton-Waitsburg country the fruit farms are becoming much more numerous than here, and the wheat yield of that part of the valley has already been noticeably affected, it is claimed.

Some of the samples of wheat shown at the Walla Walla county fair are to be sent east by the Commercial club to the Chicago Land Show, as an exhibit. This grain is a good advertisement for the valley, as not one of the 12 samples of wheat tests less than 82 pounds and they range from that figure to 85.

SHERLOCK HOLMES OF ITALY IS NO MORE

Rome.—One of the interesting characters in the country, Giuseppe Marcellini, known far and wide as the "Sherlock Holmes" of Italy, has just died.

He was, however, a "Sherlock Holmes" of a type very different from that created by Sir A. Conan Doyle. He had the same unerring scent for criminals, the same cleverness and unbounded courage, but he was of much lower social position, and worked entirely among the hoodlums or "teppisti," as they are known here, forming the so-called "malavita" or bad life. He was originally a butcher's boy, and retained all his life the nickname of "Macellaretto," the "Little Butcher," by which he became the terror of all ill-doers.

This bravest among the brave, although often "punctured," which is their slang for wounded, did not die a violent death, but of heart disease, possibly brought on by the excitement and emotion of his adventurous life.

His specialty, so great was his prestige among the lawless, consisted in being able to do alone what a whole detachment of policemen would not have succeeded in doing. Through all his heroic career he never reached a higher salary than $30 a month.

TALES OF TORTURE TOLD.

Paris Locksmiths Say They Were Persecuted by Strikers.

Paris.—"We were taken into the house, tied to a post, and kicked and beaten till we nearly fainted. A man stabbed us with a large fork, another held a knife to our breasts, and we promised, under compulsion, to obey their orders."

This testimony was given before a Paris magistrate by a number of locksmiths, who were tortured by members of the Locksmiths' Syndicate on strike because they refused to leave their employers in the lurch and continued working after the strike had been declared.

The men were hunted down by 20 strikers, kept without food from 6 in the morning till 6 at night, and after being tortured were marched down to the Bourse du Travail, where they were put on a platform to face a room full of 4000 strikers.

The strikers threw at the wretched men everything they could lay their hands on, struck them with their boots, spat in their faces and maltreated them till they swore allegiance to the Locksmiths' Syndicate.

The ringleaders in those proceedings were arrested and two of them have been imprisoned.
