ONE TIME WAIF IS AN HEIRESS

RECENT PENDLETON GIRL HAS INTERESTING PAST

Adopted Daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Charles Quinney Relative of Swedish Noblemen, Had Been Cast Off By Family and Would Have Been Sent to Reform School but for Interference of Local Rector.

The following interesting account of Amy Isabelle, adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Quinney, who left this city recently for Chicago to claim her share of a large estate, is taken from the Virginia City Times, of Virginia City, Montana:

The story of the life of Miss Amy Isabelle Quinney, the adopted daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Charles Quinney, for a number of years residents of this city, where Rev. Quinney was rector of St. Paul's Elling Memorial Episcopal church, reads like a romance. Her father, whose name was Johnson, was a member of one of the first families of Sweden. Because he married a young woman of peasant parentage, he was disowned by his family and came to America, locating at Chicago, where he died nearly 20 years ago, leaving a widow and five daughters, of whom Amy, then a baby, was the youngest. The mother was left without means and after struggling along a few years, on November 14, 1896, about six weeks after Amy's fifth birthday, placed the little one in the Illinois Children's Home and Aid Society. Here the child remained until April 14, 1899, when she was taken from the home by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wright of Sheridan, Montana, who legally adopted her as their own, having the written consent of the trustees of the home and the mother, Mrs. Johanna Johnson.

After a little more than three and one-half years' residence with her adopted parents, the Wrights tired of her, having had twin girls born to them, and they set about getting rid of the little waif by filing in the district court at Virginia City, a charge of incorrigibility against her. The hearing was had before Judge M. H. Parker December 11, 1902. The only witnesses to appear against her were Mr. and Mrs. Wright and as there was no one to testify in behalf of the little girl, Judge Parker issued an order committing her to the reform school at Miles City. However, the commitment was never made. Rev. and Mrs. Charles Quinney's attention was drawn to the case and after an investigation they became convinced that the charges against the child were untrue and asked permission to take the little girl into their home on probation until the next term of court, which met in March. The court gave its permission and on March 13, 1903, the proceedings were reopened by Judge Parker and a number of witnesses from this city, including Rev. and Mrs. Quinney, were examined and without exception testified to the excellent character of the little girl and that she had absolutely no bad traits whatever, but, on the contrary, was a tractable, lovable child. The court dismissed the incorrigibility proceedings and in so doing took occasion to scathingly rebuke the foster parents for the cruel manner in which they sought to rid themselves of her support.

The child was placed in the custody of Rev. and Mrs. Quinney, who cared for her as their own. She was sent to school and Mrs. Quinney, who is a highly educated and accomplished woman, taught her music and other accomplishments and she became one of the most lovable and talented young ladies of Virginia City.

In June, 1907, Rev. Quinney was called to the rectorate of the Church of the Redeemer at Pendleton, Oregon. Just before leaving this city, on June 14, 1907, Rev. and Mrs. Quinney legally adopted the young lady, letters of adoption being issued out of the district court by Judge Lew L. Callaway, district judge, and she was taken with them to their new home at Pendleton, Oregon, where she has since resided.

The above history of the young lady, in so far as her parentage is concerned, has only just come to light through a search instituted by lawyers in Sweden to find the heirs of a deceased brother of her father, who died intestate, leaving a large fortune which is to be divided equally among Miss Amy Quinney and her four sisters, who, with their mother, are residents at Chicago, residing at 1014 Oakdale avenue.

A week ago last Saturday Miss Jennie Johnson, sister to Miss Amy, arrived in Pendleton and laid the proofs of her heirship before Rev. and Mrs. Quinney, who gave their sanction for return to her Chicago home with her sister whom she had not seen since a little child and whom she had completely forgotten. The following Monday the two sisters left for Chicago, Miss Amy promising to return to the only parents she had ever known as soon as the necessary formalities of securing her inheritance have been gone through.

Miss Amy has a host of friends in Virginia City who will rejoice to learn of her good fortune and who hope that she may in the not far distant future pay a visit to the old town in which the happiest days of her young life were spent.

SHEEP INDUSTRY IS OF IMPORTANCE

Representing as it does an investment of $28,759,410, according to the recent report of the state board of sheep commissioners, the sheep industry of Oregon is one of the most important in the state. The above amount includes the land and equipment necessary to handle the 2,441,314 head of sheep in the state. Of this total valuation Eastern Oregon has $24,920,100 and Western Oregon $3,839,310. This is a big difference in the two sections of the state as divided by the Cascade mountains, a greater difference, perhaps, than will always be maintained. There is a large portion of the country in Eastern Oregon, however, that is better adapted to sheep raising than to any other kind of livestock and so long as general conditions encourage the sheep man, that part of the country will continue to be devoted to that industry more than any other. It does not seem likely that the number of sheep in Eastern Oregon will ever be greatly increased since the capacity of the range seems already reached. On the other hand under a more intensive system of farming to which the Willamette valley is adapted it is possible to double the number of sheep carried upon her farms several times over. It is in the states where more diversified and intensive farming is carried on with from fifty to two hundred sheep on each farm that we find the greatest sheep population per square mile and not in the open range countries. The possibilities of the industry have hardly been touched yet in Western Oregon and the day may yet come when her flocks will exceed those of the other side of the state. The Oregon Commission estimates that this industry furnishes continuous employment to 3600 men and that $2,350,154 is expended in labor each year in caring for the flocks. The industry is well worthy of all the protection it gets.—Rural Spirit.

RAILROAD COMPANY MOVES HEADQUARTERS

Houston, Tex.—On January 30, the employees of the Frisco general offices at Beaumont, their wives, daughters and sons, with their office furniture and household goods, came to Houston in a special train. It was the biggest general pass issuing day in the history of the Frisco lines, east, for everybody took a free ride. In all something like 150 people are to be added to the population of Houston and the installation of the company's effects in the Binz building office rooms will be done with the view to losing as little time as possible in the routine affairs of the railroad.

The Frisco office force numbers nearly 100 and a third of that number are heads of families which also moved to Houston. Notice was served upon these employees some time ago to prepare for the change and not many families were left behind when the official removal took place. Probably the largest single office force is that of Auditor J. H. McCullough numbering about 40. Then there is the traffic department force and the employees of the department of J. H. Gaston, claim agent and J. H. Lauderdale, treasurer, in addition to the staff of Vice President Elliott.

I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not broken down with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them of my good friend, your Vegetable Compound, and that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take it as I have. I am scarcely ever without it in the house."
