PACKED IN TIN FOIL—The 165-pound Parisian, who claims to distinction rests on his ability as an operator of the tiny Demoselle monoplane, went up at 3:35 o'clock in an exhibition flight. He rose to a height of nearly 3500 feet and swept out over the suburban country for a distance of nearly two miles before coming back to earth. Garros, as in the case of his predecessors in the air, was in command, operated a craft, Garros, who earlier rivals, absolute control of the machine, when he climbed to a height of 4000 feet and began to descend.

Better than the "makings"

First stages of his attempt of a record, when the crowd laughed at him. The yellow-plated Demoselle bounced and careened and rocked and jumped and then did it all over again. Audemars stuck heroically to his post; for it did take a hero to operate the dangerous invention of M. Santos Dumont, and all flying men know it. Around the course bounded the Swiss and back to the point of starting. Here an accident overtook to the materialistic, answered back: "Yes, and he's going to land that 500 simoleons that the Chamberlain's Commerce is selling up for his successful flight." The crowd, around the grand stand, taking their aviator and the "dirigible" would without mishap. Several were sure that they were among the most successful of the day. Some even said that his machine was a masterpiece of engineering, and that it was a pity that he was not a Frenchman. The crowd was so enthusiastic that they began to cheer and shout, and the aviator, who was a Frenchman, was so pleased that he began to wave his hand to the crowd.

It was with this impression that Simon, who had been out of the running for an hour or more, suddenly longed for the "flying" by the way—just as the crowd was so enthusiastic that they began to cheer and shout, and the aviator, who was a Frenchman, was so pleased that he began to wave his hand to the crowd.

FOUR PRETTY GIRLS WILL BE PIONEERS

TO SETTLE ON OREGON'S HOMESTEAD TRACTS

Fair Colonists from Wisconsin and Minnesota Say They Know the Practical Side of Farming and Will Succeed.

Among the thousands of persons who have come to Oregon to take up and build new homes were four pretty girls who recently arrived here bound for central Oregon to locate on four 320-acre homesteads.

When Elinor Heyer, Kathryn Heyer, of Menomonee, Wis.; Bess Stevens of Janesville, Wis.; and Mabel Freeman, of Minneapolis, bid their friends goodbye at the Northern Pacific depot in Minneapolis February 5 they had implicit confidence in themselves, believing that they would be able to earn sufficient money while on their way to Oregon to meet their current expenses and have funds left to pay the filing fees charged for entry on government land.

And the quintet of courageous young women did not overestimate their abilities. Two months' work in soliciting subscriptions for a magazine was filled with exciting experiences, but it proved a profitable undertaking. They will remain in Portland one week and then will go into central Oregon to take up their lot with the thousands of homesteaders who have just preceded them.

The young women are enthusiastic over the possibilities afforded by their taking up homestead lands. What is more, they are not going in to the matter blindly. They have informed themselves on every district in the central part of the state and they know more about that territory than the average Portland resident.

They were brought up on farms and they know considerable about scientific farming. They have mastered the rudiments of the dry farming method and they take up their new labors with a conviction that they will succeed under the most adverse circumstances.

"We are delighted with Portland and Oregon and we feel that we will succeed in our farming venture," said Miss Elinor Heyer. "We know that there will be many hardships, but of course such things are to be expected when one goes pioneering. Our knowledge of farming is not altogether theoretical. It is practical and once we get our land we will make it all right."

"We will get four adjoining homesteads, our cabins built at the four have our cabins built at the four inside corners. We don't intend to get lone some and homesick. Will we be afraid? No. The men of the western country are chivalrous and have deep respect for our sex. We are anxious to get to our new location as soon as possible to take up our new fields of activity."

"We still get letters from friends and relatives who look upon our venture as impossible, but it makes no difference to us what they think. We have become so enthusiastic over the whole trip that the people out here are calling us the 'four girls of the Golden West.' Some of our eastern friends are making light of our work and our intentions to take up land, but we firmly believe that the last chuckle will be ours."

AMERICAN BOYS IN MEXICAN JAIL

EXPERIENCE OF TWO LADS CAPTURED BY FEDERALS

Interesting Story Told in a Letter From One of the Boys in the Des Moines Capital—Kept in Filthy Cell.

One of the striking stories from Mexico recently was the arrest of two American boys, one of whom proved to be from the state of Illinois, Guy C. Core, writing to the Des Moines Capital from El Paso, Tex., on April 1, has an interesting story of the adventure of these young lads. It is as follows:

Locked in a filthy, narrow cell, with a dirt floor and compelled to eat only the very coarsest of food, Lawrence Converse and Edwin Blatt, the two Americans lads in jail at Juarez, Mexico, on charges of sedition, have decided that Sherman was about right about war.

The boys, both adventurous spirits, decided at the outbreak of hostilities they would like to see a real battle. It was with this purpose in mind that they entered the interior of Mexico. For a time they were with Madero's forces, but finding that battles were few and far between, they started for the American side. They observed that a party of rurales eyed them curiously and so made greater haste to put the Rio Grande between themselves and Mexico. A short time after they had crossed the river and were seated on a log eating frijoles, sixteen rurales galloped up to the river on the opposite side. Stealthily four of their number crossed the river and seized the boys. They tied their hands and marched them across the river at a ford. Here rope nooses were thrown over their heads and tightened about their necks. The ropes were tied to the saddles of the rurales and this way they entered Juarez. Here they were thrown in jail incommunicado, which means they were locked in a dark cell for 8 hours, without being allowed to see any one. At the end of that time they were placed in a vile smelling cell and daily insulted by Mexican soldiers. At night the lads were separated and each compelled to sleep with four Mexican convicts on the dirt floor of a cell 7x9 without bed clothes or blankets of any kind. When first incarcerated young Converse was ill. He pleaded for a physician, but the only reply was: "You ought to be shot." In Spanish. Through the night other prisoners would be heard begging for food. "We are starving to death," was the cry. Back would come the answer: "You ought to be shot."

Young Converse Born in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Converse of Glendora, California, father and mother of young Converse are here doing all in their power to free the lads. Mr. Converse is an attorney. He lived formerly in Ayco, Iowa and later at Lewistown, Illinois, where he was city attorney for four terms and president of the board of education three terms. Lawrence Converse, the lad who is causing state departments of two nations to act was born in Oakland, Io., 21 years ago.

Mr. Converse was in Pennsylvania when Mrs. Converse learned of the arrest of her son. She immediately went to General Harrison Gray Otis, of the Los Angeles Times for help. General Otis is a personal friend of President Diaz. He wired at once to President Diaz asking the two American lads not be executed. A telegram came back "No violence at present." Mr. Converse believes this is the only thing that saved the lives of both boys. Mr. Converse has taken a surveyor to the spot of the boys capture 46 miles west of El Paso and established the fact beyond question that they were arrested on American soil. Yesterday he brought six Americans who saw the lads arrested and taken across the river and has their sworn depositions.

HAREM SKIRT APPEARS IN BINGEN ON THE COLUMBIA Husum, Wash.—The harem skirt has made its initial appearance in Bingen on the Columbia. Quite a flutter of excitement was experienced among the citizens over the daring of two young ladies who appeared on the streets dressed in this most modern garb.

John W. Phillips, who witnessed the odd spectacle, thus describes it: "From a short distance I thought they were a couple of young men slovenly dressed. The pants appeared a great deal too big for them, and the coat as though it was about to slide off the shoulders, and as both the young men were undersized, the clothes had the appearance of being made to fit a man about the size of John Thams."

"I was a much fooled man, however, for when I approached near enough to see their feet the fact was disclosed that they were not young men, but young ladies dressed in the very latest style, a la harem skirt. I do not think the dress will become popular, at least in Bingen."

"THE SQUAW MAN COMING."

Well Known and Popular Drama to Be Seen at Oregon Theater Friday Night.

The information that Geronimo, the blood-thirsty medicine man of the San Carlos Apaches was dead at Fort Sill, where he had been a prisoner of war, was hailed with delight by every resident of the southwest who has not forgotten the Geronimo outbreak and the months of murder, rapine and outrage which terrorized the inhabitants from Colorado to the City of Mexico.

Just before this famous outbreak of the bloodthirsty and treacherous Apache, Tabywana, head chief of the Colorado Utes, went on the warpath for ponies, scalp, Mexican women and any other loot which might fall to his war party.

On the banks of Medicine creek, Oklahoma, laden with spoil, many captives and a big band of ponies and a large herd of cattle, Tabywana crossed the trail of Geronimo's party. It was easy to tell from the moccasins tracks and the trail of the lodge poles that the party was the hereditary enemy of the Utes. Tabywana sent his captives to southern Colorado with an escort, and the balance of the outfit trailed the "snakes." Near Henrietta the Utes met Captain Lawson and his intrepid squadron of the Seventh cavalry. The Utes joined forces with the troops and drove the Apaches
