MEXICAN REVOLUTIONARY LEADER

A man who comes from the bushy green reaches of the picturesque Mexican revolution isubit but unfeignedly proud of what he considers the "national enemy," the United States. The man's name is Jesus Morelos, and the Mexican revolutionary leader is so convinced that the United States is the "national enemy" that he has already promised to Mexico that if he should ever become the head of a revolutionary government in that land, Mexico would be his ally if the United States is the enemy.

Morelos, who is a member of the Mexican revolutionary party, is an interesting figure. He is a tall, thin man, with a strong, clean-shaven face, and he speaks English fluently. He was born in Mexico, but spent most of his life in the United States, where he was educated at the University of California. He is a lawyer by profession, and has been active in the Mexican revolutionary movement for over ten years. He is a member of the Mexican revolutionary party, and is one of the leaders of the movement.

Morelos is convinced that the United States is the "national enemy" of Mexico, and he is determined to do everything in his power to bring about peace between the two countries. He believes that the United States is seeking to dominate Mexico, and he is determined to prevent this from happening.
