SEEKS MOTHER OF DEAD YOUNG MAN

JOSEPH A. PETTITT KILLED LEFT INSURANCE POLICY

Deceased Formerly Worked for Will Meiners Near City—Killed in Iowa May 3—Insurance Policy Does Not Contain Address of Beneficiary.

Who knows of the whereabouts of Mrs. Mary E. Pettitt, who is reported to have formerly lived in Pendleton? Her son is dead and has left an insurance policy in her favor and payment of the claim is withheld pending the location of the woman.

This morning Postmaster J. T. Brown received a letter from J. L. Partridge of Corydon, Iowa. The letter sets forth that Joseph Albert Pettitt, formerly of this vicinity, was killed in a runaway on his ranch, May 3. The young man died without regaining consciousness. Among his effects an insurance policy in favor of his mother was found, but the address of the beneficiary was not given.

Before the accident young Pettitt had talked with his employer about William Meiners for whom he had worked while in Umatilla county. Accordingly Mr. Partridge asked Mr. Brown to inquire for friends and relatives of the dead man. Mr. Meiners remembers Pettitt, who worked for him several years ago. However, he knows nothing as to the whereabouts of the mother.

Pettitt is described as having been five feet nine inches in height, weight 170 pounds, black hair and blue eyes. He was a member of the Eagles lodge at Colfax, Wash. He had a watch with the name of W. W. Sherill, who is an officer in the Eagles lodge at Colfax.

CALIFORNIA BOOMERS WILL ADVERTISE STATE

Eureka, Cal.—Northern California will be advertised on an unprecedented scale during the coming six months and the plans for the great publicity campaign will be worked out during the convention opened here today by the California Development Board. Executives of nearly all the chambers of commerce, boards of trade and promotion leagues of the state are taking part in the conference. While projects of benefit to the entire state will be discussed, the general theme of the meeting is "The Development of the Northern Part of California."

According to reports of officers of the board, great progress has been made during the last year in completing a permanent and official affiliation between the various publicity organizations of California. State publicity, which had its origin in California and has been developed here to a greater extent than in any other state of the Union, has been reduced to almost an exact science. The co-operation between the hundreds of local clubs and chambers prevents waste and has given far better results than when each organi-

Bixby, aged 26 and 19 respectively and both residents of Umatilla county. The second couple were Peter Sarante aged 28 and Len Howe, aged 17. Stallions Must Be Inspected.
Dr. C. W. Easten, who was recently appointed inspector of stallions under the new state law, which went into effect May 25, declares that all stallions must be inspected else it will become his duty to prosecute and the penalty for failure to comply with the law is by no means a light one. The minimum penalty is $50 fine or three months in jail and the maximum is $200 fine or six months in jail. Any person, he states, who breeds from an unlicensed stallion can not collect for such breeding.

Still More Coyote Scalps.
The beginning of the month of June has witnessed no abatement in the collection of bounty on coyote scalps. A decree was therefore given to the plaintiff and the property rights settled as per stipulation. Attorney J. B. Perry appeared for the plaintiff in the second case.

WHIRLING SPRINKLERS FOR IRRIGATION

NEW PLAN PROPOSED ON EXTENSIVE SCALE

Apparatus is Specially Designed for the Experiment and is Larger and of Greater Capacity Than Used on City Lawns.

Spokane, Wash.—Irrigation by means of whirling sprinklers is to be carried out on an extensive scale in the Quincy district in Grant county, Wash., upon a large tract of land a few miles south of the town of Winchester. The apparatus, specially designed for the experiment, is larger and of greater capacity than the sprinklers ordinarily used on city lawns. Water will be lifted from a deep well by a double action pump, driven by a gasoline engine.

In making the foregoing announcement at his headquarters in Spokane, Stephen O. Jayne, irrigation investigator for the United States department of agriculture, said that owing to the irregularity of the land and the sandy character of the soil a large expense would be involved to properly grade it for irrigation by ordinary methods, and, he added, it is to avoid this outlay, as well as to secure a more economical use of water than would be possible otherwise, that the experiment is to be carried out.

"The irrigation branch of the department of agriculture is conducting experiments throughout Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and other states," Mr. Jayne continued, "with a view of determining the practicability of the various methods and it is believed that the knowledge so gained will result in a material saving of increased efficiency in the use of valuable water supplies."

"While irrigation by the use of whirling sprinklers is not a new idea, having been successfully and profitably practiced in various places in connection principally with truck farming operations, it is something of an innovation to undertake the watering of general field crops by this method."

"Apple growers in the vicinity of Chelan, Wash., are this season installing sprinkling systems also, and during the summer the whirlers will be going in many orchards."

"Albert Seiter, a successful orchardist of Moran Prairie, near Spokane, last year installed such a system and was greatly pleased with the results, also demonstrating to his satisfaction the advantages of applying water in this way. A novel idea was to place a light dressing of straw beneath the trees to prevent the sprinkling from heating the ground so as to compact and crust the surface. He has some old Jonathan apple trees which never produced fruit of marketable size until last year, when by irrigating them with sprinklers a very heavy yield was obtained, most of the apples being larger than four-tier."

BIG INDIAN WAS IN FAMOUS BATTLE

Many people have passed along Court street today and have noticed an old Indian of giant physical proportions sitting in a chair in front of Major Lee Moorhouse's office, the stolid stoical expression on his large, heavy face never changing. There is something about the aged red man, who has remained in that one spot almost the whole day, that compels the passerby to take a second look, something that instinctively speaks of a historic past.

It is well that the passerby wonders as to his identity, for his career has been a notable one, beginning in the days when his people roamed over this country in undisputed possession of all they surveyed. He is none other than Wa-win-llip-llip, which in English means Red Elk, and he is one of the few survivors of the battle of Walla Walla, one of the most famous engagements of the uprising of 1855. In this battle he was shot in the head and left on the battlefield for dead, but he recovered and lived to become a friend of the whiteman. In his own words, he "lay dead three days, then come to life."

Although Red Elk owns land on the Umatilla reservation, he makes his home on the Nespelem or Colville reservation in northern Washington. Twice a year he makes the trip down here to collect his rents and then goes back to dream of the glories of the past and to wait for his summons to the Happy Hunting Ground. He belongs to the Cayuse tribe and has a brother, Eat-no-meat, on the local reserve. Both Indians are counted among the most honest of the allottees and were never known to cheat or rob their own tribesmen or their white brothers.

WIFE DESERTION SETS CHILDREN TO WORK

Wife desertion has become a pronounced factor in the child labor problems in this city, the effect being to throw the burden of the family support on children too young to take heavy responsibilities, says the Portland Telegram. Many applications from such children have been made during the last month to the secretary of the commission. The new law provides that children of school age—under 15—must attend school. This in many cases, works a seeming hardship upon the deserted family, which could live on the few dollars a week earned by the older children.

Another class of applicants which objects to the new law, which went into effect May 20, are the immigrants, newly arrived from the south or middle west. With but a few weeks of school before the summer vacation sets in, the children of school age wish to work and are disappointed when they find that no permit can be issued to them until after the schools close.

Hundreds of children, during the next six weeks, will make application for vacation permits. They are granted to boys and girls over 14. They may work in factories, restaurants, stores, etc. Children of 12 or over may be granted permits to work in the fruit canneries, the discrimination being made because the work is not continuous and is less of a tax on the younger children. No permit is required by law for children to work in gardens, hopfields and berry patches.

This year honorary pupils of the public schools will be granted vacation permits before the close of the school year, though they cannot be used until vacation begins.

CLEVER DEDUCTION.

When Congressman J. Hampton Moore was a reporter in Philadelphia he was assigned one night to go out and get a human interest story about a woman who had died at the age of eighty-eight, leaving a twin sister, with whom she had lived for fifty years, as sole survivor of an old family.

The house stood opposite a cemetery at the outskirts of town, and Moore wished as he pulled aside the crepe to ring the bell that his city editor wouldn't be so fertile with his ideas of human interest stories. A woman friend of the aged sisters opened the door and ushered J. Hampton into the parlor, over in the corner of which rested the dead sister in her coffin.

The neighbor seemed to feel it was up to her to entertain the reporter while waiting for the other sister to drag herself in for the interview. By way of small talk the woman motioned with her thumb in the direction of the coffin and remarked: "That's the lady that died."

"I suspected as much," replied Moore.
