MILLERS ARE "AGIN" RECIPROCITY PLAN

Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 14.—Meeting on the border line between the United States and Canada, the millers of the country today hurled defiance and hard words at the statesmen of both countries who are seeking to bring about reciprocity. The meeting is under the auspices of the National Millers' Federation and has attracted leading millers from every part of the country.

"The federation stands for reciprocal relations between the United States and Canada," said Secretary Gootzmann of Chicago, "providing they are made equitable. The millers oppose free flour because the cost of manufacture is less in the Dominion than on this side of the border. Lower wages are paid by Canadian millers and much of their manufacturing is done by water power."

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Recently returned from the land of "has beans" are striped silks in a great variety of designs. Some have plain stripes of strong color; others show a delicately flowered stripe in contrast to a pale tinted one, and others have irregular stripes in the old-fashioned "chine" effects separated by narrow black lines. These when worn with little coats of black silk or satin are charming. Pale yellow silk striped irregularly with fine clustered black lines is one of the favored patterns for afternoon frocks, and the skirts of such gowns are fuller than tailored skirts.

Some of the newest skirts measure as much as three yards about the hem which is a vast improvement upon the models that have obtained for the past few months.

Lace is used much less in the ornamentation of gowns than plain white linen and English embroidery, but a hint of this was given in the last of these letters. When lace is used, it is generally employed as an underdress, seen dimly through a transparency. Gowns made entirely of white English embroidery, done in an excessively open design and worn over a slip of black satin, have become extraordinarily chic. Belted with black velvet ribbon or with a long fringed sash of black silk, they are quite devoid of color, except in the accessories of parasol, stockings, etc.

A French dressmaker famous for the beauty of her lingerie frocks used quantities of the finest possible tucks set in lengthwise rows. In the narrowest bands, often measuring less than half an inch across and framed in narrow rows of fancy open stitching, they form wide borders on the skirts and perhaps compose the entire corsage. Wider bands, perhaps measuring several inches—framed in lace entredeux, alternate with bands of plain colored batiste on white batiste gowns.

One sees a good many of the belted coats and through the accepted corsetting and silhouette prevents even a belted garment from giving trim, small waisted lines, it is rather refreshing to see occasionally a coat that does not altogether obliterate the curves of the body as do so many of the short loose coats.

A fancy for making whole frocks or blouses of English or eyelet embroidery trimmed in plain material has brought out many distressing developments of this idea in cheap coarse materials, but in fine lingerie stuffs combined with plain linen or even plain linen the results are often admirable. One of the prettiest little tub frocks that has been seen this season has its body of bug linen embroidered all over in openwork design. A deep band of plain bug linen forms the lower half of the skirt and narrow bands run up from it to the shoulders on each side of the front and back. The short sleeves are chiefly of plain sheer linen with embroidery running out over them a little from the shoulders, and cuffs of the embroidery. A narrow girde and prim bow of black velvet defines the high waist line. Frocks somewhat similar to this, or at least of the same general character are shown in all the light colors and in white, and there are effective models too in white with the embroidery done in color and with the plain material either of the white or the color.

White serges with relieving notes of black are to be seen everywhere, and white serges with broad sailor collars of green, cerise, purple and lavender are among the unique models offered for country club, seashore and casino wear. They are strikingly smart and if one chooses to subdue the brilliant color of the collar and cuffs by overcuffs and revers of sheerest white or cream colored hem-stitched batiste, the effect is still more beautiful. White braid is used in great quantities upon serge frocks of all kinds, but it is of very plain variety.

HOPES TO FIND FORTUNE.

Nebraska Man Believes Michigan Nephew Died Wealthy.

Bay City, Mich.—Moses Grebe of Pearce, Neb., is in this city to search for a hidden fortune that, he declares, was left by his nephew, John C. Miller, a resident of this city, who died several months ago.

Miller lived alone and practiced the usual habits of a hermit. It was generally believed that he had considerable wealth in mortgages, stocks and other securities, estimates ranging all the way from $10,000 to $100,000. But after his death nothing was found that indicated a fortune—the estate totalling under $300. Of this Grebe received $1.19, with 5 cents for the money order deducted.

Shortly after Miller's death a local attorney was employed by relatives and a thorough search for securities

GREAT LINER STARTS ON MAIDEN VOYAGE

Southampton, England, June 14.—Enthusiastic crowds assembled about the new Geop dock here and cheered wildly as the monster White Star liner Olympic, the largest and finest vessel in the world, steamed away on her maiden voyage to New York. The giant ship will attempt to make a record-breaking trip across the Atlantic.

The Olympic has 45,000 tons register and is 827 feet long and 92 1-2 foot beam, being considerably larger in all respects than the Lusitania and Mauretania, of the Cunard line, which have heretofore held the record among the vessels of the world for size and speed. The Olympic has a sister vessel in the Titanic, which was launched at Belfast two weeks ago, and which will be ready to put in the Southampton-New York service late this year.

The Olympic is not only the largest but is also the most magnificently furnished and equipped vessel afloat. Swimming pools, a tennis court, a bowling alley and Turkish and electric bath establishments are among the innovations for the comfort and entertainment of the passengers.

The Olympic and Titanic, having eclipsed the Mauretania and Lusitania, will soon be themselves surpassed. The Hamburg-American mammoth turbine Imperator, now building for the Hamburg-New York service, will be 890 feet long, or seven and one-half feet longer than the Olympic and Titanic, and slightly larger in other respects. Last month the German company placed orders for a sister ship for the Imperator, it remains to be seen whether the new vessel will be able to lower the trans-Atlantic record of the Mauretania, which traversed the distance between Queenstown and New York in the remarkable time of four days, ten hours and forty-one minutes. The Mauretania has just made her hundredth Atlantic crossing.
