worth living and add spice to the enjoyment of things in general. Nevertheless, a Washingtonian by the name of Samuel L. Boxwell—a very appropriate cognomen, by the way—has entered a suit against a local market company for "injuries" which he alleges he received while locked in the cold storage plant of the company on June 1.

Washington on June 1, was suffering from an extremely hot spell and the inhabitants were wishing that they could get anywhere to obtain relief from the sweltering heat. But Boxwell, according to his sworn statement, was unceremoniously thrust into the cold storage room and detained there for half an hour, much against his will.

Instead of thanking the market company when he emerged from his cool sojourn, Boxwell proceeded at once to his attorney's and a suit for $25,000 damages for his alleged injuries was the result. He claims that his health has been injured by the experience and that $900 a minute is not too much recompense.
