2600-MILE TRIP OVER THE SNOW WITH DOG TEAMS.

Spokane, Wash.—Twenty-six hundred miles by dog team from the Arctic ocean via the MacKenzie river to Spokane, is a trip to be undertaken the coming winter by E. S. Dowling of Spokane, who is prospecting on the delta of the northern stream and along the shore of the sea. Writing from Fort McPherson, Dowling says in a letter to acquaintances in this city: "here have been but few white men over these arctic wilds, and those who have made the trip have told so little that the lay reader has not even the remotest idea of what it all means. From the beginning at Athabaska Landing, Alberta, Canada, the trip is full of thrilling experiences which cannot be told in a letter of ordinary length. It would require a book of many pages of text and illustrations to do justice to the subject. I have arranged to pass several years in prospecting, but if all goes well I shall make the trip to Spokane with my dogs and sled during the winter." Dowling gives no indication of his success or failure in finding ground of value in the far northern district.
