Whitmore shot and wounded the bear twice when the animal attacked him. Awaiting the coming of the bear he attempted to fire a third shot at close range, when he found the gun empty, and a blow from the rifle barrel had no effect on the infuriated animal. A struggle ensued, the bear bringing the hunter to his knees, badly mauling him, and would have killed him but for the aid given the man by two Scotch terrier pups, which attacked Bruin and worried him until weakened by the two bullet wounds ran away to the river, where the carcass was later found, the bear having bled to death. The bear weighed 350 pounds when dressed.

The wounded hunter walked two miles to the railroad and was brought to this city for treatment, the run being made on a gasoline speeder.

AT THE PICTURE SHOWS

Orpheum.

Excellent program for Sunday and Monday.

1. "A Friendly Marriage." Vitagraph. A breezy western girl marries an English lord, they decide upon "A Friendly Marriage," but soon fall madly in love with each other, and "All's Well That Ends Well," though there are misunderstandings that pique the interest before this happy ending is reached. This motion picture is filled with beautiful scenes and holds the attention from start to finish, both by the strong love motive and the charming setting, staging, etc.

2. "The Two Devotions." Essanay. This deeply religious film pictures the sacrifice made by two young people who dearly love each other, on account of religion. The acting is strong and well sustained, each of the principal characters interpreting their parts admirably. The film is certain to make a deep impression since its subject is unusual and the actors perform their parts sympathetically.

3. "The Hermit." Pathé. A man who is alone in the world loses all that he holds dear when his son dies. He leaves civilization and going to the wilds lives the life of a hermit. Near him are a man and his little family, who are prospecting for gold without success. One day the little daughter of the prospector wanders away and is found by the hermit, who takes her to his cave, feeds her and gives her a nugget from his store, for he has acquired wealth. The little girl later tells her father where she saw the gold and he robs the old man but is seen and followed. How the father is saved from disgrace by his little daughter is a most pleasing story.

4. "That Winsome Winnie Smile." Edison. The famous Winsome Winnie is introduced to the motion picture public for the first time on the screen and they will be charmed to make her acquaintance. Her smile conquers every one.

5. "No Cooking Allowed." Edison. A breezy farce of how two young girls evaded the rule of a heartless landlady and incidentally made a new and most desirable acquaintance.

The Pastime.

Where you see the best in motion pictures. Sunday's program:

"The Village Hero." Biograph. There is a call for volunteers for the village militia, while the young folks are assembled on the village green. Eugene, the village masher, is first to respond, much to the admiration of all the village belles, including Max's sweetheart, who would like to see Max imbued with the same spirit. The hero business is not in his particular line, but he enlists because his sweetheart insists. He is tried out as a bugler with laughable results, and when the battle starts he "beats it" and hides. When tired and hungry he enters a home which has just been attacked by revolutionists. They think a whole regiment back of him and flee. That many times circumstances favor a hero will occur to the ones who see this picture.

"The Match Maker." Lubin. The match maker in this picture is a young English aristocrat with a sense of humor. Love comes in cross-cross lines and no one can tell at the beginning or in the middle who is going to marry whom. This story is fresh and amusing. It is perfectly produced and makes a delightfully human picture full of humor. This comedy is good. It ought to have a star pasted after it to mark it out.

"Kit Carson's Wooing." Selig. Of all the picturesque stories surrounding the lives of our early frontiersmen, none stands out more prominently than that of Kit Carson's romantic marriage to the half breed Indian girl who had saved his life. This incident is used as the theme on which this story is based. Pictured in that wonderful of beauty "The Yosemite Valley" this subject is out the usual run.

"The Minute Man." Edison. A story of the battle of Lexington, portraying the principal incidents in the history of our country, beginning with the fight for freedom from the yoke of English rule. The scenes were actually taken on the historic grounds. The house stood and still stands upon a stone throw of the roadway upon which the famous retreat took place.

HER FRIEND'S GOOD ADVICE

Newburg, Ala.—"For more than a year," writes Myrtle Cothrum, of this place, "I suffered with terrible pains in my back and head. I had a sallow complexion, and my face was covered with pimples. Our family doctor only gave me temporary relief.

A friend of mine advised me to try Cardui, so I began taking it, at once, and with the best results, for I was cured after taking two bottles. My mother and my aunt have also used Cardui and were greatly benefited.

I shall always praise Cardui to sick and suffering women." Cardui is a purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, tonic remedy for women, and will benefit young and old.

military drama, a Rex comedy drama, sensational forest story and western comedy.

"An Enlisted Man's Honor." Solax. A stirring military picture showing the famous 15th cavalry U. S. army, by special permission given the Solax company. One day the troop went on detached service, leaving Jack to guard the post money. Jack's rival, a renegade Mexican, robbed Jack and escaped to his mountain stronghold with his band of desperadoes. Jack was arrested for theft, but escaped. See the thrilling way in which he vindicated his honor and won his bride.

"A Forest Romance." Reliance. Tired of forest life, the wife of a stern old trapper eloped with a city man. The elopers became lost and when the woman fell over a cliff her husband deserted her, telling her husband he had not seen her. The story ends in a sensational scene pictured among the wild grandeur of the mountains.

"The Artist Financier." Rex. Daddy didn't want his girl to marry a poor artist, but he got nicely fooled in a great financial deal. The artist has mastered the art of lip reading and through a field glass saw dad and a capitalist talking about a new railroad. He bought the land the syndicate wanted and compelled dad and his company to pay a good stiff price. Daddy was so impressed by the artist's ability that he gladly gave his consent. Beautifully tinted. "It's a Rex."

"The Cook of the Ranch." Champion. Here we are! Such a comedy of western life. It's all laugh. Slim Jack loved the buxom cook and angered at her coolness had her come to meet him, but skullduggery substituted a heathen Chinese. The cook was in a wild rage and the whole ranch was in a turmoil. After some side-splitting mixups, peace was declared and "Slim" won his bride. Four thousand feet of beautifully colored American made film.

It seems that the great navies and armies do not insure peace, after all, as according to the theory of militarists, they should.
