COULD WATER RESERVATION.

border the reserve as to supply the Indians fully on their probable, or I may say, even possible future needs, when they have ultimately secured their allotments in severalty. What these needs will be cannot be definitely determined. For the present the matter is administrative in its detail. These Indians are now but the wards of the government. As it pertains to the lands which the government is holding in trust for them, it is administering them for their proper use and benefit, and in its administrative capacity it ought to be the judge of what amount of water of the streams adjacent to the reservation is or will eventually be essential for the needs of the Indians for use in connection with their lands.

"The government has not to make a proper appropriation to enable it to obtain the use of the water. It has only to take that which has been reserved or that which has never been subject to prior appropriation upon the public domain. It has only to come into its own when its needs may require—the department of the interior being the instrumentality by which it exercises that right and privilege—and all persons seeking appropriations from public streams must take subject to this paramount right."

Should the government officials proceed with the irrigation of the Umatilla reservation and should the courts continue to rule with the same spirit shown by Judge Wolvortin, it is very obvious that the Umatilla reservation would soon become a highly cultivated section and capable of easily sustaining the Indians who reside upon it.

At North Yakima.

Much of the Indian land under the Yakima reservation in Washington is now irrigated and in reply to a query from the East Oregonian, Mr. Ralph B. Williamson, a prominent attorney of North Yakima and a friend of R. R. Johnson of this city, gives the following information as to how the work was done:

"The irrigation work done upon the Yakima Indian reservation is of considerable extent and has been accomplished under special appropriations by congress to the tribal fund, which, I believe, is a reimbursable appropriation though from what source I do not know. It seems to be customary for congress to appropriate about $15,000 a year for this work to be carried on, and I believe some $175,000 to $200,000 have been expended. Practically all of the lands under the ditch are allotted lands upon which trust patent has not yet been issued, although some 10,000 acres have passed to white ownership through sale of deceased allottees' land.

"There has been considerable agitation for five years regarding the reclamation service taking over the work on the Indian reservation and completing the same under the national Reclamation act. This has not, however, been done and the reclamation service has done no work whatsoever upon the reservation, the entire work having been done under the irrigation bureau of the Indian service, of which Mr. W. H. Code was formerly the chief engineer. He has now left the Indian service and is in private engineering practice in Los Angeles. The money for this work was secured as above stated."

Orpheum.
1. "The Child Crusoes." Vitagraph. The story of Robinson Crusoe does not afford one-half the interest and thrilling happenings that this picture of shipwreck, adrift on a raft and a life on a strange and wonderfully beautiful island.

2. "The Temptation of Rodney Vane." Kalem. A pretty romance amid unsurpassed California scenic surroundings. It shows some of the vineyards.

3. "The Desert Claim." Essanay. A drama of the golden dais in California.

4. "Why He Gave Up." Biograph. A fine farce comedy. Hubby is a great bird. He pretends to be in a great fury because wife ordered a new hat. He went down to the shore to have a good time with the boys and girls. He didn't know his wife was going to be there.

5. "Abe Gets Even With Father." Biograph. Abe's father refused him a nickel, so he blackened his eye with a burnt cork and told his father that Murphy, the janitor, had given it to him. Cohen goes out to do Murphy, but is done instead, so Abe instead of getting a nickel gets a dollar to make it appear to his mother that father nearly annihilated the janitor.

The Pastime.
The home of good pictures. A classy program for Friday and Saturday.

"The Failure." Biograph. The hero of this story gives way under the pressure of bad fortune instead of fighting against it. His sweetheart, disappointed in him, turns him aside. Down the hill he goes until he is finally a singer in a low dance hall. Two failures seldom make a success, especially where the two are man and woman but they most convincingly did in this picture.

"The Husking Bee." Vitagraph. Don't fail to attend this husking bee and enter into the spirit of a real country jollification that will fill you with the feelings of youth.

"Two Men and a Girl." Essanay. A high class sensational drama. A home-like rural picture which develops a sensational climax, bound to thrill any audience.

"A Diamond in the Rough." Selig. A dramatic love story of unusual power, interwoven with an interesting story of human nature.

Cosy.
Special feature for today and tomorrow, "The White Slave Traffic," in three reels of lectured motion pictures, and 25 slides. An intense dramatic portrayal of the snare and pitfalls that surround young girls in the great cities, and the various methods employed to lead them astray. The light of publicity is turned on this awful traffic in human souls. There is nothing in these pictures that will offend any one, as there is nothing vulgar or obscene in any way. Highly endorsed wherever shown. There is a great moral lesson in this splendid production that cannot fail to be of tremendous value to young and old, and one that will make a truly lasting impression. Both the pictures and slides are explained in an interesting manner by a first-class lecturer, one who knows whereof he speaks. Admission 5c and 10c as usual.

At the Grand.
If applause and laughs can be considered as points of merit, then The Austin company scored heavily last night in their first production of the down east rural drama, "The Deacon." This is the first dramatic play produced by the company being intermingled with comedy and song and dance numbers is by far the best bill presented by the Austins. It is the first bill to draw a number of curtain calls, which shows the patrons of the Grand appreciate dramatic work when it is put on right. Leslie Bates as the Down East deacon with a harking for lemonade "with a stick in it," certainly looked and played the part to perfection. Dick Austin surprised his friends by playing a black face part and kept the audience in one continual smile. Bert Long and Jack Allen in straight parts did exceedingly well. Little Miss Gladys Vail played her first leading part and surprised friends by handling her part besides singing two songs without a fault. Great things are in store in the future for Miss Vail if she keeps on improving as she has for the last two months. Bessie Bates, as the old maid in love with the deacon, played her part without a hitch. Mrs. Bates is very good in characters and especially in old maid parts. Lulu Austin as the deacon's niece, as usual played her part without a fault. Ethel Whelan and Margaret Clark as the two dancing maids are very clever. Two reels of motion pictures were also shown. Tonight is amateur night. Special matinees Saturday and Sunday.

years than has been shown on any other project in double the time."

DIES PLAYING PINOCHE.
New York.—"I'm going to meld 300 on this hand," laughed Frederick Hein as he and three intimate friends, Gustave Ahl, Peter Dennis and Adam Hoffman, sat in a pinocle game in Trinity Hall. One Hundred and Fifty-sixth street and Trinity avenue, the Bronx.

These men have been rival pinocle players for years. Every night they have met and always excitement ran high.

"I say I'm going to meld 300," Hein laughed again. Suddenly his face paled, he gasped and fell dead. A doctor said Hein, who was sixty-two years old, had died of heart disease.

Hein until a few years ago was a German actor.
