OUR TOWN.

We like our town, the same as you like yours. Because we live here, and it's all we've got; And living in a place and liking it. Seeing it with a deep affectionate wisdom. That is the soul of art. Now and again. A man with eyes for the significant. Stands spokesman for the rest of us, and says. He likes the place that cradled him, the life. That gave him life, the speech that gave him thought. The everlasting daily mess of things. In which he grew. That's all there is to art. —Selected.

LA FOLLETTE.

Senator Robert M. La Follette who began his Oregon campaign with a speech in Pendleton this afternoon, is a remarkable man and one of the great figures in the presidential fight now underway. He is a progressive of such zeal and intensity that nothing can swerve him from his course. He may not win the republican nomination this summer but he is fighting just the same. He fights on through storm as well as sunshine and he may see the clouds of opposition give way to brighter days. That has occurred to him in the past and it may occur again.

But while La Follette is about the most uncompromising leader in the insurgent cause he is not as radical as is generally supposed. He stands firmly and strongly for the reforms in which he believes but he does not go beyond wise depths. La Follette's radicalism comes from the fact of his intensity more than anything else. His record justifies the belief that he means all that he says and that if given the power he will drive the ship straight through to the harbor of progressive government no matter what contrary breezes blow. He is not of the Taft variety.

The best thing about La Follette's candidacy and the best tribute to him as a public man is the loyalty with which the people of his home state stand behind him. The senator has been bitterly assailed for years. He has been snubbed, scorned and laid away as politically dead. But Wisconsin has never gone back upon him. That state stood by him while congressman, while governor, through two senatorial campaigns, and it is now backing him more strongly than ever for president. It is testimony to the effect his home people believe in him and will stand by him whether he succeeds or fails.

The people of Pendleton listened this afternoon to a strong man and a valiant, forceful fighter for the cause of the people.

SUCH MANLINESS!

In an advertisement yesterday F. K. Welles declared the editor of this newspaper had refused to publish a communication he had submitted. If Mr. Welles had been fair he would have told the full truth about the matter. Mr. Welles was asked to alter that part of his communication wherein he made statements derogatory to the woman in the case. It was explained to Mr. Welles that this paper would publish anything he had to say in his own defense and would even give space for criticisms of this paper. It was held, however, that it would be needless and unjust to cause further worry to a woman who had already been grossly insulted through a screed in the Pilot Rock Record and who had been ousted from a teaching position under circumstances that pointed to jobbery.

As to communications the East Oregonian always follows a very liberal policy and is usually ready to give space to responsible critics regardless of what their views may be. This paper believes, however, that it is no part of legitimate journalism to assail defenseless women. Insofar as it can the East Oregonian will always protect the names of women and save them from annoyance and abuse. It is the belief of this paper that right minded people will endorse this policy and will share our views that Mr. Welles was lacking in manliness or he would have made the change suggested.

A politician shows a peculiar character when, in order to promote his own interests he insists upon jumping on the prostrate form of a woman who has already suffered mistreatment at his hands.

A CIRCULAR BALLOT.

A circular ballot has been proposed in Chicago as an equitable way of arranging names at primary elections and regarding the scheme the Chicago Record-Herald recently said:

There is ingenuity in the plan for a ballot to contain names of candidates radially arranged in circles, which has been devised by Edmund H. Roche. No candidate would have an advantage and the whole would be contained on a small sheet. The democratic party ballot for Cook county will be more than seven feet long, containing 407 names. Mr. Roche's ballot would be only two feet square.

Would the average voter, however, like to twirl his ballot many times to write a complete ticket? The existing form of ballot has an advantage of easy inspection, and its only fault is that it is too long. Objections to giving some candidate the leading place can be met by the rotation of ballots—the printing of an equal number for each candidate, so that each will have as many as every other candidate with his name heading the list.

The circular ballot might well be tried somewhere at a primary election to see whether voters find it satisfactory. The number of names on primary ballots cannot be greatly reduced until we get the short ballot.

Pendleton has been highly honored today by the visit from a presidential candidate. This is the first Pacific coast town in which any presidential candidate has spoken during this campaign.

One more week of hard campaigning and then the people of Oregon will settle some long standing scores.

If Umatilla county will give its 4000 votes to Judge Lowell it will bring about his nomination.

START SEARCH FOR MAN MISSING IN MOUNTAINS

Spokane, Wash.—Jacob and Gottlob Kellar, master bakers in Spokane, are tramping through the mountain wilds of the Sheep Lake country, in British Columbia, searching for their brother, Gustav Kellar, who lost his way, after separating from Michael Johnson, his companion, on a big game hunting and trapping trip, last fall. They have provisions and ammunition for a stay of five weeks.

Officers of Spokane Lodge, No. 241, Loyal Order of Moose, with which the missing man is affiliated, will dispatch a searching party of five men, chosen from among its 3,500 members, to the scene in 10 days, in the event no word is received from the two brothers.

Three theories are advanced by seasoned woodsmen, who are familiar with the district where Kellar is lost. One is that in an effort to reach the cabin he wandered about aimlessly until overcome by hunger and cold. Another is that he was attacked by wild animals and died from injuries, and the third is that he was accidentally shot. The brothers alone believe he is alive, probably in a prospector's cabin or in an improvised abode in the woods.

Johnson says he heard a single shot, fired presumably by Kellar, about o'clock the afternoon the men separated. It appeared to be off some distance, but he thought nothing of it until Kellar failed to return that night. He made a wide detour of the cabin the following day, without finding trace of his companion.

Johnson walked to the settlement of Deer Park, B. C., the second day, when a searching party was organized; but meanwhile snow had fallen to such a depth that efforts to trace the lost hunter were of no avail. Returning to the settlement the men reported tracking numerous cougar, several of which they killed; also encountering three packs of timber wolves and a bear in the deep forest.

Tobacco from Altaifa.

Miliken, Colo.—When you buy plug tobacco made in old Virginia about this time next year, it's ten to one that you'll be chewing about 50 per cent home-grown Miliken altaifa, five carloads having been shipped to Lynchburg, Va., to be mixed with tobacco leaves and sold as high grade smoking and chewing tobacco.

Several weeks ago orders came to well known farmers to send five carloads of the best altaifa, for which $12 a ton was paid. The freight on each car was $110. His curiosity excited, Walter Jordan began an investigation.

As a result of his discoveries hundreds of acres of altaifa will be grown for the tobacco trade next year.

A man can't sympathize with any one who has the toothache unless he has had it himself.

VOTES FOR WOMEN

Michigan. The Farmer's clubs of Michigan, in session in Lansing a few days ago, went on record in favor of giving women the ballot. A majority of the people of Michigan are in favor of it. The last legislature was almost ready to give it, and would have given it had the question been settled on its merits.—Ray City, Mich., Times.

Missouri. It is reported that a bill to confer suffrage on women in Missouri will be introduced at the next session of the state legislature by Senator Thomas J. Lysaght. At the last session Senator Lysaght supported the bill fostered by women's organizations, and he has been much interested in the suffrage campaign in California.

California. It cost California women about 15 cents per vote to win their fight for suffrage. Gentlemen politicians say the average cost is about $2.30 per vote. Down with the high cost of voting!—Wichita, Kan., Beacon.

The South. One of the teachers in a college in the South wrote to the Boston Equal Suffrage association for Good Government for material for debate on the question of woman suffrage and has just written again about the debate. "These southern girls were all against suffrage," she says, "until they studied the question for this debate. Now the affirmative side has decided to convert the world to equal suffrage, and will be quite disappointed if they have no obstacles to overcome. One of them used an argument from a story in which some one says: 'The suffragists have the best reason, but instinct tells me they are wrong,' and answered it: 'Instinct belongs primarily to animals, reason to higher forms of life. We hope some day to evolve into that perfect state called angelhood when supreme reason is our guide. Meanwhile, it is well to rely on it as much as possible. The direct descendants of those of our ancestors who relied on instinct only are still swinging by muscular tails to leafy boughs.'

Virginia. President Tyler, of William and Mary college, in a recent address, said he thought the governor of Virginia had set too remote a date when he predicted that the women of that state would be voting within 10 years. He believed they might get the ballot within five.

Tennessee. The Tennessee State Federation of Labor, at its recent annual meeting in Memphis passed resolutions endorsing woman suffrage.

Connecticut. "Connecticut, the conservative old land of steady habits," says an observer, "is stirred as seldom in its history by a unique woman suffrage campaign which is not only doing what the Connecticut Woman Suffrage association desires, making it clear that their movement is to be taken seriously, but is bringing more than one man who understands the state and sees beyond the end of his own nose to believe that the Nutmeg State may be the leader among Eastern states in equal suffrage."

Kentucky. The bill giving school suffrage to women has passed the lower house of the Kentucky legislature by an overwhelming majority.

It doesn't take a very clever woman to make a man make a fool of himself.

THE REAL FEMININE

Athletes for Women. A small knowledge of athletics has shown enormous possibilities to women. They have learned to practice hygienic living, and to appreciate the value of pure air and wholesome food, well earned after exercise.

The leading women's colleges of the country have long since taken up the movement in the effort to foster a love of athletics among women. Rowing, tennis, basketball, snowshoeing and polo all have their devotees among the fair sex, and the amount of interest that is being taken in the more strenuous sports gives promise of development along the same lines.

Mushrooms a la Creme. Slice the mushrooms and then stew them in butter with a dessert-spoonful of chopped onion per one-half pound of mushrooms. The onions should have been cooked in butter without being browned. When the mushrooms have been stewed, drain them, cover them with boiling cream and boil gently until the latter is well boiled down. At the last moment finish with a little thin cream and dish in a timbale.

Cepes are another form of mushroom more commonly used in France than elsewhere. They are easily obtainable, however, in the large cities of the United States.

Omelette aoyarde. Fry some chives in butter and a little lean cooking bacon. When the bacon begins to take a good brown color add some eggs, which you have previously seasoned with salt and pepper and beaten as for an ordinary omelette. This omelette should be no thicker than a pancake. When it is well cooked on one side turn it as you would a pancake.

This omelette is equally agreeable to eat hot or cold. In Savoy the peasants carry it about with them for their mid-day meal. Arranged as a sandwich it forms a very good dish for hunters or picknickers.

DIFFERENT WITH A JOB.

"John," said Mrs. Fawcett, "you must get your salary increased at once. We simply can't go on living as we have been living unless you can manage to have a larger income."

"I'm afraid we'll have to move into a cheaper flat, dear," John replied. "I can't ask for a raise. Business has been bad during the year, and there's no indication that it is going to pick up much until after the presidential election."

"But it would cost us a good deal to move—more than we would save by paying less rent. You ought to have more than you're getting. You have often said so yourself."

"I know I have, little woman; but it is one thing for me to think I ought to have more than I'm getting and another thing to make my employers think so. The fact is that I've been feeling rather shaky for some time. They have discharged half a dozen men since the first of the year. I wouldn't dare to ask for a raise now."

"This is just the time when you should ask for it. If you had ever studied human nature you would realize that."

"What has human nature to do with it?"

"Why, if you went to them and let them understand that you considered yourself such a good man that they couldn't afford to let you go even when they were hard up and reducing their force they would be all the more likely to think so themselves. It's just like a girl who has a lot of beaux. There was my own case for instance. When you asked me to marry you there were four other fellows who were crazy to have me, and I didn't want to get married, any how, but I accepted you because you had the courage to ask me when you knew I could have easily gotten along without you."

"Yes, but you see, I could afford to take a chance then. It's different with a job."
