SOSO.

"What is your name, little girl?"
"Soso."
"What did you say?"
"Soso."
"Soso? But that isn't your real name, is it?"
"Yes, sir?"
"Are you sure it isn't a nickname or a pet name?"
"Oh, yes, sir. It isn't a pet name. You see I was the sixth little girl that the stork brought to our house and when they asked papa if he was glad he said: 'Oh, soso.'"

ICEBERGS IN NORTH SEAS.

Dangerous Floes Are Reported Off Southwestern Alaska.
Seattle.—Captain J. C. Hunter of the steamship Northwestern and Captain Charles McGregor of the Dolphin, which arrived from Alaska, reported dangerous ice floes and icebergs in the path of navigation off southeastern Alaska.
Captain Hunter said Icy Strait and Cross Sound were filled with ice and that an iceberg as big as a city sky scraper had grounded near the path of navigation. Captain McGregor encountered a large amount of floating ice in Frederick Sound and Stephen's Passage.
He said the large bergs were from fifty to sixty feet long and from ten to twenty feet high.

TAKES AIR ROUTE TO CATCH HIS STEAMER

Suppositious Traveler Carried to the Ancona by Coffyn in His Hydroplane.

New York.—Frank R. Coffyn, the aviator, entertained a crowd on the Battery, a party of invited friends on the yacht Paula, and a lot of others on the bay by an attempt to land a passenger on a departing steamer.

The scheme worked very well—11 but landing on the ship, for there was no spot there large enough for his hydroplane and had there been he would have been unable to rise again.

Arrangements had been made with the steamer Ancona, of the Italian Navigation company, to take on a suppositious traveler named Wallace with letters, supposed to have arrived from Chicago too late to catch the Ancona with the tub John J. Timmins and Bill Quigley, Battery boatman and Wall street flyer, with his new Whitehall, the old having been recently stolen by a pirate.

Coffyn ascended from the breakwater at Pier A with his passenger, flew high, circled, spiralled and came down about 200 feet to the port of the Ancona off the Statue of Liberty.

Both men in the hydroplane got pretty wet. Bill Quigley took off the passenger and placed him on board the Ancona. The passenger delivered his letters, but was put off the ship, according to the press agent, because he didn't have enough money to pay his fare. Quigley put him aboard the Timmins.

Coffyn couldn't rise from the bay and he and another man in the hydroplane were towed by the Paula to the Battery. Coffyn yelled that the Paula was towing him too fast, and a pretty girl on the yacht retorted: "We have nothing on you."

The Paula cast him off the breakwater and Coffyn's two helpers got the hydroplane upon its float and worked it back inside the breakwater, where they made it fast.

O. of A., where she is at present passing through the chairs.

PROUD PAIR SPURNS ALMS.

Confederate Veteran and Sister. Therefore, Face Ejection from Hotel.

Washington.—Too proud to go to the poorhouse or accept aid from friends, Edward S. Rowe, an aged Confederate veteran, and his sister are living under a tiny bit of canvas stretching between trees in Tacoma Park, after being ejected from their shack.

For seventeen years Rowe and his sister lived in a tumble-down hotel, thinking they owned it, but a flaw in their title was discovered. Ejection proceedings were begun, and the sheriff turned them out at night in a pouring rain. They spurn alms.
