AMBASSADOR TO TURKEY RETIRING

Constantinople, Turkey.—The Rt. Hon. Sir Gerald Lowther, G. C. M. G. British ambassador to Turkey, has resigned his post and will retire from the diplomatic service at an early date. His five years' term of service at Constantinople expires on June 30 next.

Sir Gerald Lowther entered the diplomatic service in 1879 and was first appointed attache in Madrid. He subsequently served in Paris, Constantinople, Vienna, Bucharest, Sofia, Tokio, Budapest and Washington. In 1901 he became minister to Chile and in January, 1905 he went to Tangier as successor to Sir Arthur Nicolson. A few days after the restoration of the Ottoman constitution in July, 1908, he succeeded to his present post.

It has, therefore, been Sir Gerald Lowther's good fortune to be appointed to two posts just prior to events which had the effect of enormously increasing the responsibility attaching to these posts.

As British ambassador to Constantinople, Sir Gerald Lowther had to deal with problems arising out of the Boshia annexation crisis, the change of regime in April, 1909, the Cretan difficulty, the outbreak of the Libyan war and the Balkan war, and conducted himself in a manner that gained him the esteem of all who knew him. His departure from Constantinople will be much regretted.

Lady Lowther, who was formerly Miss Alice Blight of Philadelphia, earned the gratitude of the Turkish sufferers from the war by the energy with which she organized practical measures for the relief of want and misery.

GREECE PRAISES BRITISH ADMIRAL

Athena, Greece.—The head of the British naval mission, Rear-Admiral Tufnell, recently called at the ministry of marine to bid farewell to the minister and officers employed there. The admiral said he regretted having to leave the Greek navy and expressed his admiration for the work being done by the fleet during the recent war. The minister, in reply, paid a warm tribute to the work which Rear Admiral Tufnell had accomplished in so short a time in the Hellenic navy as chief of the British naval mission.

New Pit Below Firth of Forth.

Edinburgh, Scotland.—The Carriden Coal Company, the crown lessees of the minerals under the Firth of Forth are making excellent progress with the sinking of their main shaft on the foreshore to the rear of Bonness dock. They have already cut a seam of main coal four feet thick, and of first class quality, and will proceed with their operations until a depth of 80 fathoms is reached. Preparations are now being made for sinking another shaft a little to the west of the present one.

MAN KILLED AT THE DALLES WAS CECIL PETTJOHN

N. Burget telephoned to Thomas Pettjohn of Dayton, Wash., Wednesday and he said the dead man was his brother, Cecil. The identification of the desperado was then considered to be established beyond a question of a doubt.

However, E. R. Ware, ex-postmaster of Echo, Ore., came here Wednesday on business and by chance he attended the coroner's inquest. Viewing the remains, he made the sensa-

UNIVERSITY TESTS FELT INADEQUATE FOR STATE POSTS

Edinburgh, Scotland.—The royal commissioners at present considering the best method of filling the vacancies in the civil department of the state have by their inquiries, brought to light much interesting evidence. It has long been felt that such posts scholarship is by no means the only test, and although the universities are practically unanimous in favor of a scholastic education, yet something that would gauge the efficiency and administrative capacity of the applicant is seen to be an absolute necessity.

Evidence has been received from the four Scottish universities, the newer universities of England, and the University of Wales; and truly their representatives would have shown but little practical sense had they failed to emphasize the value of that education which they themselves supply. But further the professors recognize and deplore the fact that the examiner remains ignorant of the capacity for affairs of the candidate, be the students' papers ever so perfect, and the final report of the commission in its inquiry, after an all-round test, will be awaited with greatest interest in every university center.

In Scotland the complaint is heard that the sons of poor parents are excluded from the Indian civil service by reason of the long and expensive college training; but evidence from the universities shows conclusively that poverty in Scotland and Wales is practically no bar to a university education. The poorest youth can obtain the best teaching as soon as he proves himself qualified to profit by it, and this was so even before the Carnegie trust came into operation, although doubtless the struggles of the peasant scholar were hard and the sacrifices of his parents many.

You can get a good standard made piano to suit your income and taste at Gramhams.

tional announcement, "That man is not Pettjohn; his name is John or Frank McCullough and he lived at Echo."

C. R. Bonney, a local liveryman who formerly lived at Echo, was summoned. He viewed the body and confirmed Ware's opinion, also being positive that the desperado is not Pettjohn, but one of the two McCullough boys, who worked for Stanfield brothers, extensive stock raisers nine miles from Echo. Deputy Coroner Bert Thomas telephoned to Stanfield brothers supposing he would learn which one of the McCullough boys was missing, but ran up against another stone wall, being informed that both Frank and John McCullough were at the Stanfield ranch that very minute. Deputy Thomas, however, was advised that the dead man here might be a brother of Frank and John McCullough—Hope McCullough, whose whereabouts wasn't known to his brothers. The McCullough boys are cousins of Beale McCullough of Echo, the 18-year-old girl who identified the dead man as Cecil Pettjohn.

Some of the testimony given at the coroner's inquest tended to show that the desperado was named Pettjohn. W. F. Padgett, proprietor of the O. K. livery stable, stated that the man killed by Harriman, during a conversation he had with him Monday, said his name was Pettjohn. Padgett asked the fellow why he signed his name J. C. Brown when he signed his Collamer a bill of sale following the sale of his horse. "That's my business," replied the unknown, according to Padgett's testimony.

John Cary, night call boy for the O.-W. R. & N. company, testified that he had met and talked with the desperado and that the fellow told him (Cary) that he "expected to go to his folks at Dayton, Wash." That would indicate the dead man was Cecil Pettjohn, for the Pettjohns live at Dayton. In the meantime a search is being made for Hope McCullough.

J. W. Pettjohn, father of Cecil Pettjohn, has communicated with the boy's mother, Mrs. Newton Sharpshire, in California, and she may be on her way here now.

Ed Wallace, who was made captive by the desperado at the E. Hro ranch and compelled to go, at the point of a revolver, to the William Rickman ranch and search the house and barn for spurs, testified that the desperado urged Wallace to kill him (the bandit) saying that his life wasn't worth anything and that there was a $10,000 reward for him. Wallace refused and the bandit shook hands with Wallace and moved on to continue his hunt for "spurs."

The Rapid Spread of Advertising News

MANY of the household articles in daily use in our homes, many of the perfected ideas in wearing apparel, and much of the advanced thought in living today would not now be benefitting humanity were it not for the advertising in newspapers like the EAST OREGONIAN.

As a concrete example much to the point, a prominent manufacturer and distributor of a footform shoe for children—a shoe of special construction and down-to-date features—recently advertised in twenty of the principal cities east of the Mississippi river for a period of four weeks.

At the end of that time he experienced such a demand for this shoe that he has been unable to fill his orders on time for many weeks.

The public who read his advertisements in an incredibly short time learned, to its profit, about something that benefited it, something that filled a real need, and responded by practically doubling the manufacturer's business.

By this systematic series of advertisements the producer, the retailer, and the consumer were helped. This is just one case. There are hundreds like it.
