Fame is Uncertain Goddess When Championships Are On the Altar

Performers Become Heroes or Clowns in the Twinkling of An Eye—The Horse is the Arbiter

A champion is born every year at the Round-up. Honors that were won at one exhibition may be lost at the next. Few championships fall twice to the same man. Bert Kelly came nearly capturing two championships in the event of all events, the bucking contest. At the first Round-up, he made a wonderful ride on Lightfoot and was declared the winner. At the second Round-up, he did not enter in this event but came back last year, made his way into the finals and would have captured the championship had not Long Tom forced him to ride safe. L. W. Minor drew Angel and scratched him at every jump for the championship.

John Spain of Union, has won more championships than any one man. At the first Round-up, he won the wild horse race, and at the second the bucking contest and the stage coach race. Bertha Blancett and Ella La Zinka put up one of the most spectacular fights for a championship in the cowgirls' relay race. The Pendleton girl won the event the first year but in 1911 lost when her horse flew the track and threw her. Last year, she won in the first day's race but was so badly injured when her horse went into a fence that she was unable to finish the following two days. Mrs.

Blancett thus won the handsome silver cup. Jason Stanley won the pony express race for two consecutive years and thus came into permanent possession of a diamond watch fob. This year new champions will doubtless be made and old ones unmade. The following is a list of the champions of the first two Round-ups and the winners last year:

When George Fletcher Rode For Bucking Championship

Colored Boy Was Favorite With Crowd at Round-Up in 1911, But Did Not Win Out

The finish of the 1911 Round-up broncho busting contest was one of the most thrilling and spectacular as well as one of the most dramatic incidents ever seen at the local stadium. It was a contest for supremacy between races, with the white man, the black man and the red man pitted against each other. As has been his fortune through all history, the white man won, but not until he had extended himself to his utmost effort.

When the judges announced their selection of the three men who were to ride in the finals for the three prizes awarded and the three broncho busters stepped into the arena, the spectators saw the stalwart figure of John Spain, Union county cowboy, George Fletcher, the Pendleton negro boy, and Jack Sundawn, a fullblood Indian from Idaho.

The Indian drew for his mount the fiercest little buckner, Lightfoot, upon whom Bert Kelly had made his championship ride at the first Round-up. Sundawn made a brilliant ride and as long as the little outlaw confined himself to pitching, sunfishing and twisting, he had no difficulty in keeping his seat. But Lightfoot is one of the headiest buckers in the Round-up string. Failing to shake his rider by his usual stunts, he stopped still and commenced biting at the legs that clung so leech-like to his sides. For a few seconds Sundawn was kept busy escaping the wicked teeth of his mount but, even when the horse started bucking again, he kept himself in his saddle with ease. Then it was that Lightfoot resorted to his final trick. Straight for one of the judges' horses he rushed and, coming alongside, brushed saddle against saddle with such force that the Indian's foot was torn from his stirrup. He was unbalanced and quick to seize his opportunity, Lightfoot gave a last desperate leap, throwing his rider with such force that he lay stunned in the dust for several minutes and finally had to be carried from the arena on a stretcher.

Spain was next up and he had drawn the redoubtable Long Tom, the most feared horse in the west. Long Tom is a large horse and when he strikes the ground after a plunge, the jar is something few can withstand. Spain had made his ride in the semi-finals on Star and had stayed with that broncho without any apparent effort. However, with Long Tom it was a different matter. He had no time to heed grandstand or bleachers, no opportunity to make any show. His entire attention, all of his strength and suppleness and the last bit of his knowledge of the game was necessary to enable him to keep his seat without disqualifying himself by "pulling leather." A year before he had drawn Lightfoot when that horse was an unknown and was literally surprised into grabbing the horn. He rode Long Tom every jump in approved buckaroo style, across the arena, through the fence and around the track until horse and rider were both exhausted.

Fletcher rode him with such ease and abandon that the crowd shouted itself hoarse. The negro boy is what is known as a "sloppy" rider. He is as limber and elastic as a rubber band and sits in the saddle so loose that his body flops
