DESPERATE BAYONET CHARGE FOLLOWS AND NINE MILES OF DEFENSE POSITIONS STORMED AND TAKEN

Aeroplanes Direct Gunners and Shells are Thrown Into Lines of Kaiser's Forces Literally Piling the Trenches With Dead and Wounded--Allies Have More Than 1,000,000 Men in the Field With Half Million Held in Reserve--Military Experts Say That Nothing Can Save Germans From Being Forced to Retreat,

LONDON, Sept. 23.—After the fiercest artillery fire since the war began British forces northeast of Paris have succeeded in turning the German line just south of Saint Quentin and Peronne. Such was the statement made today from unofficial sources but it is regarded as reliable. As a climax to the bombardment, the British troops made a desperate bayonet charge, capturing nine miles of the German trenches which were literally filled with dead. Aeroplanes gave the British gunners the German range so accurately that the British shells burst directly over the German trenches. Twice the Germans tried to charge but the deadly artillery fire of the British drove them back. Finally the British rushed forward and swept all before them. In the trenches the dead and wounded were found so intermingled that it was difficult to rescue the latter. The movement, it was stated, was a complete success and the capture of the German position constituted the first really important gain from the Germans' main force. Though it was admitted reinforcements were being rushed to the Kaiser from Belgium, military experts said that nothing could save his forces from being encircled and forced to retreat. The German wing was outnumbered by the allies two to one, it was said. The war office announced that the French and British had more than a million men in the field with half a million more being held in reserve. PARIS, Sept. 23.—Confirmation of reports that the allies partly have turned the German right wing on the Aisne was received from the Bordeaux war office. By violent fighting along the bank of the Oise, it was stated, the allies left accomplished an advance of more than ten miles. The Germans made another fierce attack from northeast of Verdun but by a brilliant series of counter attacks the French repulsed them. "The allies left wing," said the war office report, "is steadily progressing against the Germans commanded by Von Kluck, having succeeded by a determined and at times hand to hand fighting, in gaining ten miles along the right bank of the Oise. The allies movement at this point was an enveloping one and was progressing exactly as planned by the commander-in-chief." "The Germans violently attacked the French positions from the northeast of Verdun," the statement continued, "but this attack was first checked and then repulsed in a series of brilliant counter attacks by the French armies centered there. "No change of moment was noticeable at any other point on the line of battle. The Germans hold the district south of the Wever region from Richecourt through Seicheprey to Lerouville. In Lorraine and the Vosges the Germans have evacuated Nominv and Arracourt." BORDEAUX, Sept. 23.—Declaring that the German right wing on the river Aisne had been turned, the war office asserted Von Kluck's army was in imminent danger of isolation. After a struggle of 18 years the engraving companies of New York have settled their differences with the photo-engravers' union.

This would make the survivors number 466. The dead were understood to include nearly all the three ships' officers. GERMANS CLAIM ADVANTAGE. WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—A cablegram from Berlin to the German embassy said the French center in the battle of the Aisne was retreating after suffering tremendous losses and that the French offensive was weakening. FURLONG LECTURE PROVES TO BE TREAT TO PENDLETON FOLKS

A lecture of absorbing interest up on a country little known was listened to last evening in the Oregon theater by an audience not large in numbers but extremely appreciative. The lecturer was Charles Wellington Furlong, noted author and traveler who is here to see the Round-up that he may again write of its glories for national periodicals. He spoke upon "Fertile Argentina and Her Vast Patagonian Pampas," and illustrated with stereopticon views from pictures taken by himself, the lecture proved a revelation to the audience. The purpose of the lecture was to start a fund for the erection of a monument to the cowboy in this city, a project about which Mr. Furlong is very enthusiastic. Before commencing his lecture last evening, he urged that the citizens of Pendleton "get busy" in order that some other western city may not first seize upon the distinctive idea. He also suggested that the best statue obtainable should be secured and urged that proper consideration be given the matter before any sculptor is employed. Preliminary to his lecture, too, Mr. Furlong paid a glowing tribute to Pendleton. "I have been in nearly every section of the western hemisphere," he said, "and have traveled more or less on the other side of the globe and there has been no one point that has ever gripped me the way

Pendleton has. I do not ask you to take my words alone as proof of my statement. I offer the fact that I have come for the second time across the continent to attend your Round-up and I should have been sorry, indeed had I been forced to stay in Boston while the Round-up was under way. There is no place that I feel more at home, save in my home city of Boston, than right here, in Pendleton." Commencing with his lecture on Argentina, Mr. Furlong carried his audience with him by means of photographs and word descriptions through the length and breadth of that great South American republic. By means of maps he first made clear the geography and physiography of that country and to most of the audience this was educational in itself. The views of the beautiful cities of Buenos Aires and Rio Janeiro astonished all and the speaker's statement relative to the enterprise of the citizens of those metropolitan centers in developing the "city beautiful" idea proved that the United States can profit much from the example of the Latin Americans. From the cities Mr. Furlong went on into the heart of the pampas, showing the great stretches of almost barren land where millions of sheep

CHARLES W. FURLONG TO WRITE OF THE ROUND-UP FOR EAST OREGONIAN

Charles Wellington Furlong, F. R. G. S. and noted author and traveller, will be a contributing member of the East Oregonian staff during the Round-up. Mr. Furlong will write a story each day setting forth his impressions of the show. He is qualified to write upon the subject for he has watched the cowboy and his work in many lands. His experience has not been limited to this country nor to attendance at the Round-up last year. He has been in Africa, South America, Australia, and most every place where men ride horses. Those who heard his lecture last evening on Argentina and Patagonia will appreciate the truth of this statement. Last year Mr. Furlong covered the Round-up for the World's Work and his article was generally considered the best story of the Round-up ever written. This year he is here representing Long Harper's Weekly and Outlook, two of the big magazines of the east. The East Oregonian feels fortunate in securing Mr. Furlong's services and knows that readers of the paper will appreciate his work. It would be a splendid idea to have the Round-up issues of the East Oregonian mailed to your friends or relatives. The series for the three days may be had, wrapped, addressed and mailed for 25 cents.
