NEED OF IRRIGATION IN WILLAMETTE VALLEY

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Oct. 20.—The fact that evaporation from water surface in the vicinity of Corvallis is 24 inches from May 1 to October 1, while the average rainfall for the same period is but 5.52 inches, indicates the possibility of profitable irrigation. That irrigation is actually profitable under certain conditions has been shown in a seven-year test with nine standard Willamette valley crops, conducted by the agricultural college. The results of these experiments have been written up by Professor W. L. Powers, and will soon be published in bulletin form for the benefit of Willamette valley farmers.

In a general way it may be said that irrigation caused an increase of 65 per cent in the average yield of all crops, and increased the profits of production to the extent of $2.66 per acre-inch of all water economically used. The water was pumped from the summer water table and while the cost was in fact much less than $1 per acre-inch, the profits were figured on that basis.

And on this basis corn showed an increased profit of 43 cents per acre-inch of water, kale 60, beets $1.15, alfalfa $1.65, clover $2.71, beans $2.79, carrots, $6.33, and potatoes, $7.75. While the most profitable amount of water varies with the different crops, it runs on some as high as 6 acre-inches in dry seasons. This makes the actual profit from irrigation $16.26 per acre. When water is secured in commercial lots at corresponding prices the profits would be greatly increased over these figures. The main conditions governing the profits of irrigation are character of soil and moisture content. In all free-working soils in which the moisture content has dropped to 15 or 20 per cent, carving with the crops, irrigation not only greatly increases the yield but it lowers the dry matter cost and brings a splendid profit to the user.

FORTUNES IN POTATOES GROWING DESIRABLE SEED

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Without causing a scarcity in the United States, thousands of horses and mules can be shipped to Europe, officials of the department of agriculture declared. According to the latest annual census, there are over 24,000,000 horses and 4,500,000 mules in the country. How long they will last at the rate the belligerent countries are buying them, the officials have not determined, because statistics of purchase are difficult to obtain. Purchases by Great Britain are being directed from Toronto. Those of France are being directed by the French consul in New York. Although the animals are considered conditional contraband, there appears to be no international law forbidding their shipment at the risk of the buyers.
