Safe Open After 14 Years.
EUGENE, Ore., Dec. 4.—Closed for nearly 14 years, with the combination lost and forgotten, the huge safe in the city treasurer's office was opened.

Locksmiths had worked intermittently for two years to open the vault. Nothing but old papers and records were found. The latest paper was dated early in 1901.

How the combination became lost is not known, but for years the safe has stood in the city treasurer's office. Its contents a mystery. The safe is probably more than a century old and it bears the patent date of 1940.

sheep to eastern markets. The proposed tariffs were held up and the interstate commerce commission held a hearing in Sioux Falls in August at which the railroad companies presented their arguments. The sheepmen's evidence was not submitted because of lack of time but another meeting has been arranged for January, he said.

The secretary advised the wool men not to contract their wool on the sheep's back, citing the sales of last spring as an argument against this method. He also urged that the association go on record in favor of a pure fabric law for the protection of the American people against misrepresentation of adulterated manufactured products of wool.

The operation of the national forests has proved satisfactory, he said, the government officials during the last few years having assumed a different attitude from the realization that the sheep benefit rather than injure the forests. However, he declared he wanted to see some method adopted by the forestry service which would permit the small sheep owner to maintain a first class band.

Secretary Hoke also advocated that
