(The Baltimore Sun.)

From one end to another this counry is ringing with a chorus of optimism. From the president of the United States down, from bank president and corporation head and platn business man, come statement and interview and letter expressing a belief in good times shead, and very pear ahead at that. If a period ! prosperity is not to be our due, their all the exports have gone wrong. The Sun is glad of this, of course

It is gind that times are better, and promise to be very much better, and it is glad that it was able to be fore-vesterday when several lots sold at $1.10 per busel. The largest jot sold, ording to current reports, consisted of 10,000 bushels belonging to E. P. Marshall and W. J. Furnish in addition there were some small purchases made by the local mills, one of those selling to a mill being Andy Peobler. There has been little wheat selling of late owing to the fact the crop has almost passed out of the hands of the growers and to the further reason that many of those who still have wheat propose to hold until spring in hopes of higher prices.

Is Now a Farmer - Norman A. Humphrey, for 30 years an employe at the Byers mill, is now engaged in farming, having purchased the Charles Rinehart leases when the latter bought the Pierce ranch in Union county. In addition to the Rinehart land, Mr. Humphrey also has 500 acres additional. He was in town yesterday on a short tirlp.

Bee Keeping in Oregon -- Many parts of Oregon produce enormous quantities of aifalfa and other plants which should be made to yield honey. At the present time farmers are masing but little use of the nectar because many of them do not understand the value or methods of handl-ing bees. In order to supply this information and thus stimulate the beekeeping industry, the department of entomology at the Agricultural College has arranged a course of lectures and demonstrations on bee-keeping for the next regular Short Course, January 4 to 30. In addition to this Work several practical bee-keepers of Oregon will show their methods of
