NOTED PLATFORM MAN COMES WEST FOR 1ST TIME TO CHAUTAUQUA

ROLAND A. NICHOLS WILL DELIVER LECTURE ON "THE MAN WORTH WHILE."

Great Orator is More in Demand Each Year Than Ever Before and All Who Hear Him are Loud in Their Praises of His Powers as a Lecturer of Great Ability.

Every man and woman enjoys getting under the spell of a true orator, and orators of the kind we mean are rare. But a lecture is something one can feel but cannot express, for if the hearer could tell it in the way the lecturer can there would no longer be need of his magnetic inspiring personality behind it and he would not be considered great.

Roland A. Nichols, whose greatest fame has been made with his lecture, "The Man Worth While," has every quality needed by a great orator. Once you hear him you will probably agree with others that he is the peer of any lecturer you ever heard. He has never lectured on the western coast before and it was only by engaging him two years ago that the Ellison-White Chautauqua System was able to secure him for several weeks this season. The writer heard him once and for this very reason will not attempt to describe him. Simply be on hand when he comes to town. He's great.

Spanish War Veterans Parade.

MARINETTE, Wis., June 21.—Several hundred Spanish war veterans, attired mostly in blue and great paint, paraded the streets here this afternoon behind a 25-foot snake. It was the occasion of the annual "grand crawl" of the Wisconsin part of the Military Order of the Serpent. The organization, the membership of which is confined to veterans of the Spanish war, the Philippine insurrection and the Chinese relief expedition was founded on the rituals of the K. K. K., a revolutionary society that existed in the Philippines when they were occupied by American soldiers. The crawl was a feature of the state convention, which is underway here.

Waning of the Turkish Crescent

While the fate of Turkey hangs in the balance, her destruction threatened by the alliance of two countries whose past rivalries preserved to her what she has in Europe today, says a statement just issued by the National Geographic Society, it is interesting to go back and follow her down through the centuries that mark the waxing and the waning of the Crescent in southeastern Europe.

In 1199 the map of Europe was vastly different from what it is today. Practically all of what is now Greece and European Turkey was then the Eastern Roman empire. Constantinople was its capital, and it was in control of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus as much as Turkey has been recently. Russia at that time did not approach nearer than 150 miles of the Black sea.

Across in Asia, south of the eastern half of the Black sea, was the sultanate of Iconium, and east of the Mediterranean and in eastern Africa were the dominions of Saladin.

As the years went by the forces of the Crescent gradually extended themselves through Asia Minor, and before the passing of many generations they were thundering at the gates of Europe across the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles. In vain did Emperor John VI appeal to Europe to help stay the tide, and in 1453 the cloud that had loomed up across the horizon of the east for several centuries descended upon Constantinople and southeastern Europe.

With a foothold in Europe the Turks realized that they could maintain it only by a process of expansion. And European politics at that time, just as in all the centuries that have succeeded until now, prevented Christian Europe from uniting against Mohammedan Turkey.

But the several countries of Europe were too busy with their own particular affairs and too jealous of one another to unite in checking the Ottoman invasion. The result was that by the middle of the sixteenth century Turkey included all of the Balkan peninsula, Greece, Moldavia, Transylvania, Bosnia, Herzegovina and that part of Hungary east of a line drawn north and south half way between Budapest and Vienna.

As the generations passed, however, Turkish power in Europe began to wane. In her stroke-taking after the treaties of Utrecht and Rastadt, Turkey found her European dominions shrunken considerably as compared with what they were in the middle of the sixteenth century. Hungary had pushed back the invader several hundred miles to the east and south and Russia had crowded him out of one of his footholds on the Black sea. Where formerly the Turks controlled the entire region around the Black sea, Russia had now driven him out of the land of the Georgians and had gotten a short stretch of the coast of the Black sea.

But Turkey was still left in possession of the mouth of every river entering that sea, including the Don, the Dnieper, the Dniester and the Danube. She had lost Greece, but at the same time had a sort of recompense in Crete and Cyprus.

In the century that followed many things happened. By 1810 Russia had lost control of the Georgian coast of the Black sea, but she secured in exchange the section of the coast occupied by the mouths of the Don, the Dnieper and the Dniester. In the next five years there was still another story to tell—Russia had forced her way around the Black sea to the mouth of the Danube on the west and to its farthest extremity on the east.

And then came the century that has passed since the remaking of the map of Europe after Napoleon had been sent to the scrap-heap. Everything went fairly well with the Turk until the middle '70s. When Serbia and Montenegro revolted against Turkish rule, Russia, then in a secret alliance with Austria for the division of the spoils, encouraged the revolt.

After many negotiations between the powers, Russia finally went to war with Turkey with the understanding that if she won Austria was to get Herzegovina and Bosnia in return for her acquiescence in the move. Russia won and negotiated a peace with Turkey which was distasteful to Great Britain and Austria. They demanded that they be permitted to have a voice in the matter, and Russia, with her land route to Constantinople threatened by Austria and her Black sea route by the British navy, acquiesced.

The result was the calling of the Congress of Berlin. And that congress was a great disappointment in Russia, and a greater blow to Turkey. It did not give Russia what she thought she ought to have, and yet it took away from Turkey perhaps more than Russia would have taken. It set up the Balkan States, Serbia among them, and by so doing started that long chain of diplomatic negotiations and intrigues that have been so disastrous to Turkey in the past third of a century.

ADVERTISING CLUBS OF THE WORLD MEET AT 11TH CONVENTION

FEARS THAT WAR WOULD KEEP MANY DELEGATES AWAY ARE DISPELLED.

Clubs From Every Country Which Has Organizations Are Represented at the Opening Session—Many Prominent Men are Scheduled to Deliver Addresses.

CHICAGO, June 21.—The real work of the eleventh annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was begun here today. From the representation at the meeting this forenoon, fears entertained that the European conflict would affect the sessions were dispelled. Clubs from every country which has organizations were represented in the great gathering. The initial session was devoted to speeches and addresses of welcome by city officials and leaders in local advertising circles. New business was taken up immediately after the speeches.

This afternoon the sessions were devoted to "inspirational work." Three "inspirational addresses" were on the program. They were "Commerce and Christianity," "Building and Industrial Conscience," and "Education and Business, or the Influence of Education Upon Business Morality." Speakers on these subjects respectively, were Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Emory University, Atlanta; Henry D. Estabrook, New York, and an impromptu speaker.

The afternoon's program also called for presentation of the Baltimore Truth Trophy and the Kalamazoo Cup. A spectacular street pageant was planned for tonight.

New Sea Law Advocated.

ITHACA, N. Y., June 19.—That stronger military forces alone cannot secure the rights of the United States in a national crisis was the opinion expressed here at the opening of the conference of international relations by Normal Angell, noted English peace advocate and author.

"American rights can be protected only by, among other things," he said, "a radical form of sea law that implies an international law and some means of enforcing it more effectively than than taking sides in a war in which both sides may be violating it. If America means really to defend her rights, safety and interests, to say nothing of her dignity, she must prepare for taking her part in the better organization of the world."
