The Great Clayton at Alta, Three Days. Commencing Tonight; An Interview.

Telling others what he cannot tell himself, the Great Clayton confesses that he is a man with the Great Curiosity. In a breathing spell before the curtain bell called for the last touch of the rabbit's foot, Clayton tried to answer his inquirer's query: "How do you do it?" And he said just the something that he tells his audience night after night. "It is easy. I am able to recognize more rules than the average person and so can discover more of the things that lie ahead." As an exponent of the science of occultism, Clayton disclaims being a phenomenon, attributing his success in the psychic field to his power of concentration and his use of the positive knowledge that lies in the field opened by that power. He works seven months in the year and the other five he fishes, studies and relaxes to regain the energy he has given out in his daily contact with the public. Incidentally he tells very pointedly some things about "giving" personality to some one or some group, and he makes it very plain just why some people are left living but lifeless after a day or a year of struggling with a public or a person who takes content but never gives anything back. Clayton referred particularly to the life of a teacher by way of illustration. He referred in his talk to some of his most discussed exhibitions of

"thought projection," all of which have been put before the public through the press. He reiterated his inability to deal in the abstract or in matters concerning large numbers of people, unless the point of contact be brought through an individual. By way of illustration, he told of an experience in a small town where he predicted the removal of a postoffice—the town topic of discussion. He told a young lady that she would soon have several blocks shorter distance between her home and her work. She was working in the postoffice, so the deduction that the postoffice was to be moved. That's the simple story Clayton told to show how simple his work is and if that doesn't lend interest to his exhibitions then all signs fail and the simplest is not the most interesting after all. But the other part of his story that makes him so the man of mystery—the man with the Great Curiosity—is that Clayton can not fathom the hidden things that lie behind his own veil of mystery, much as he can tell his audience of the past and future. Also Bane and Bane

At the Temple Through the study of medicine, Santanelli, who is to appear at the Temple Theater tomorrow night with his company of entertainers, became interested in psychology. He soon saw that through hypnotism he could best study the human mind and while making his audience laugh he discovered and gave to the medical world

Bane and Bane, with the Great Clayton, at the Alta Three Days.

The Alta Theatre The Great Clayton The White Mahatma He calls your name, Tells every Fear, Hope and Ambition Also 3-Big Acts-3 and Mme. Petrova in "THE SOUL MARKET" A Gripping and Timely Story of society and the stage One Complete Show Pictures Start at 7 p. m. Admission 15c and 25c their present knowledge of the sympathetic system. AN UNHAPPY GIRL'S GREAT SACRIFICE The story of a girl's great sacrifice is told in the Mutual Masterpicture, "The Painted Soul," in which Bessie Barriscale is starring. "The Painted Soul," is the soul of a good and beautiful woman which looks down from a painted canvas upon a young girl of the streets as she poses for another picture by the artist who created the first. The title of the picture in which the model is to appear is "The Fallen Woman." As the soul of the good woman looks down on the girl day by day, she undergoes a transformation, which is combined with a growing love for the young artist. When the picture is complete, and the artist and the girl both feel that they have come to love one another at their parting, the mother of the young man steps in and tells the girl that she will make her son a social outcast if she does not give him up. The girl sacrifices the man's love, by seeming to have returned to her old life. The artist leaves her, and alone and held to her ideals by the memory of the soul of the painted woman, she struggles on to keep her self true to the best that is in her. In addition two laughable comedies will also be shown. Adults 10c, children 5c. Pastime today and tomorrow.

TODAY ONLY Mlle. Diane and Chas. Trowbridge in THE SIREN'S SONG The Siren's Song can easily be recommended as a masterpiece. It has in it many scenes that are hair-raising, the most prominent of which is the fight on board an ocean-going steamer, at the climax of which the villain throws the hero from the deck, the latter falling a distance of over seventy-five feet into the raging ocean.
