Americans should leave. WASHINGTON, June 29.—The government is redoubling its efforts to get Americans out of Mexico before trouble begins. The state, war and navy departments are using the strongest persuasion against those who are insisting upon remaining until the last minute.

Administration officials criticized the attitude of these Americans. Reports indicate that most of them are in western Mexico. Daniels wired to Admiral Winslow urging those hesitating not to wait. The reason that many refuse to leave is because of the strong feeling in Mexican cities that the United States and Mexico will not break. Seventy Americans left Mexico City in a special car yesterday, Consul Rodgers wired.

It is patterned very closely after an ordinance of this sort which Pendleton is adopting.

Farm products, fruits and milk are exempt from the provision. The purpose of the ordinance is to hit at such an operative peddlers and agents and is along the general lines of ordinances being adopted in more or less modified form by most of the small cities. The license fees and the penalties for violations have not been agreed upon.

Alta Friday and Saturday

The good old days with their happy care-free views of life are admirably shown in the Pallas photoplay "David Garrick," released on the Paramount program.

The big scene in the old Nag's Head tavern is wonderfully staged. In the spacious room are gathered many quaint types.

The poet with his parchment script, the sporting gent with their gamecocks that soon are in deadly combat, the richly dressed gentlemen of title, the prize fight enthusiasts in friendly bout, the spinning-labors with the solemn players drinking from the leather drinking mugs, the now obsolete mannerisms, all are of interest as being true-to-life touches of bygone days. This atmosphere frames a charming love story of the great Garrick.

There is a greater sociological lesson in "Shoes," according to the Bluebird publicity service, than there is in "Where Are My Children?"—for in "Shoes" the problem is approached before the fact instead of afterward; because in "Shoes" the problem of the masses and not the classes is revealed. And in dealing with its subject, Miss Weber has surpassed herself in craftsmanship, turning out a picture that strikes the heart broadside and overwhelming, instead of with the overdone "punch" of most encounters with problems.

The husband and father was too lazy to work, too shiftless to ever look for work with any intention of securing employment. When he, once in a while made pretense of seeking a job, he would leave the house, buy dime novel and his wife took in washing to support him; his daughter worked in a cheap store, half-slave, long hours, for a pittance, to add more to the meager sum that should sustain life in their small family—and provide the lazy father with money for to sit on a bench in the park until time to come home to his meals. This male's novels, with "the price of a can of beer" and with tobacco for his pipe. The girl needed shoes; there was no money left from her weekly pay-envelope which she took home, unopened, to her mother. The stern decrease of poverty confronted her—she simply must have shoes, for one day she had worn for months were literally falling from her feet. And shoes she got—at the greatest price women pay. Such, in brief, is the outline of the greatest sociological lesson ever spread before the eyes of any community—the Bluebird photoplay, "Shoes," with Mary MacLaren playing the role of the solely tried shop-girl, the attraction at the Covy theater today. "Shoes" is the lesson of a lifetime.

MOTHER LOVE LEADS TO A CRUEL REVENGE

The Mother Is An "Apache," in New Triangle Drama, "A Child of the Paris Streets." In "A Child of the Paris Streets," the new Triangle feature, there is a big note calculated to set women thinking. The entire plot turns on the subject of maternal love.

True, the mother concerned is only an old hag who is queen of the Paris

Apaches, but she is a mother for all that; and her affection for her thieving boy, who is about to be sentenced to the galley is no common one. She loves him better than her own disreputable life; and when the presiding judge refuses to commute his judgment on the poor wretch before him, she determines he shall be made to suffer as she suffers.

Accordingly, she sends her other son to steal the judge's baby daughter from her cradle. She does not kill the child, but raises her as an Apache, makes her a criminal in every way possible, taking a delight in her vengeance and its living reminder. In fact, the great question of the play is, "Which is the stronger, maternal or paternal love?" for the judge leaves no stone unturned in his effort to find his baby.

Temple, Sunday.

Ladies Ball Nine Wins From Locals by Score of 10-6

PENDLETON PICKED FORCE FAILS TO GAIN VICTORY WITH ATHLETIC GIRLS.

"The female of the species is more deadly than the male," Mr. Kipling poetically remarked once upon a time and Bill McGarrigle and some of the other masculine pastimes in the city are willing to admit today that he was more or less correct. Their agreement being induced by their experience at Round-Up Park last evening with Birdie Carleton's Athletic Girls.

Yes, the gentle ladies looked them, 10 to 6 and the only satisfaction that men can take out of it is that Birdie used two or three men to round out her team. A male batter and a male second baseman were not sufficient, however, to take the sting out of the defeat.

The Pendleton boys started the game as a joke but very early it was apparent to them that the skinned players were not to be trifled with. They courted about the diamond like real players and wielded their warclubs in a manner that foretells war for their husbands if they should ever decide to marry. They took the lead in the early part of the game and held it to the end.

Albert Bishop did the twirling for the girls and Bill Hall caught until a bad slight forced him to retire. Pendleton then loaned Birdie the services of Gunner Peterson while Moon Hayes went behind the bat for the locals. McGarrigle twirled for Pendleton.

Features of the game were the catch of a high fly at short by Helen Brewster, the stop of a line drive to first by Birdie Carleton and McGarrigle's four fly drive in answer to taunts of the aforesaid Birdie. The game was played after 6 o'clock and the sinking sun made the first bag a difficult one to play without error.

The girls go on to slition today and play there this evening and then go into Idaho.

The Waif's

Do you think a bad woman can influence a weak man to become a good, decent citizen? That's the great question set forth in this stirring TRIANGLE play. That's the question to which—in this instance—there is answered a big "Yes." You'll want to watch the efforts of "Rags," the poor, little rat of a dance hall piano-player, to set the young minister, who has fallen from grace, on his feet, and you'll see that when women love men few sacrifices are too great for them.
