TABLE SALT CURES NIGHT SWEATS AND AIDS CONSUMPTIVES

German Army's Experiments Prove Refreshing Quality of Mild Doses.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.—Encouraging results from the administration of common salt as a remedy against the enfeebling night sweats of consumptives, and against excessive perspiration in the case of marching soldiers, are reported by Company Surgeon Link in an article in the Munich Medical Weekly.

Sweat contains about six parts of salt in the thousand. A hard march of a few hours on a hot day results in the exudation of five to six liters of sweat, with a salt content of twenty-four to thirty grams. A strong night sweat of a consumptive exudes as much as two and a half liters, causing a salt loss of fifteen grams. This amount is far from unimportant, since the blood contains altogether only about twenty grams of salt, an amount about corresponding to the maximum daily consumption of salt in food.

Dr. Link's first experiments were made with sufferers from tuberculosis. It occurred to him that their home here where Mr. Cunha is engaged in the milling business. excessive fatigue mornings might well be due to the loss of salt, and that this might be counteracted by a salt ration. He began by giving a level teaspoonful of salt (about five grams) in a small glass of water just before patients retired. The result was a greater freshness and absence of weariness on the following morning, but the patients either had no night sweats or else very slight ones. All patients except those suffering also from stomach catarrh and high fever stood the salt dosing without any ill effects.

His experience led Dr. Link to experiment with healthy persons, and especially soldiers. About 100 soldiers of one regiment were given a teaspoonful of salt at 3:45 in the morning before beginning their day's march. After a march of nearly 20 miles in muggy weather the soldiers thus dosed exhibited much less fatigue than their comrades, and their perspiration was but a fraction of that of the others.

Doubtless the well known fact that salt is a cooling agent and that it is feeling triumphant.

DEATH FROM PARALYSIS DRIVES GUESTS FROM HOTEL

Only Dying Girl, Her Parents and Proprietor Remain—Even Servants Fleeing.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—As a 4-year-old Rosalind Cohn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Cohn of New York, lay dying from infantile paralysis in the Belvidere Hotel, Edgemere, L. I., this afternoon, the 10 other guests fled, leaving nobody in the building but J. Cohn, the proprietor, and the parents of Rosalind. Even the servants departed.

Rosalind died last night. It was not until a few hours before that the guests learned the nature of her ailment although Dr. D. Pollak of Rockaway had been making professional visits four days. Guests in other hotels nearby are badly frightened.

From now on a man will need more diligent application to acquire sunburn.
