What the Picture Theaters Have to Tell You.

"Winnifred, the Shop Girl," With Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno at Pastime Sunday.

Sunday the Pastime will present Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "Winnifred, the Shop Girl," a six-act feature from the book by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. This is one of Miss Storey's most notable achievements and one that is sure to please Pastime patrons. The Fotoplayer pipe organ will be heard both afternoon and evening, so make arrangements to be at the Pastime Sunday afternoon if possible. If you can't make it in the afternoon we will try to take care of you in the evening.

ANNA LITTLE AND ALL STAR CAST AT PASTIME TODAY

Anna Little, the Mutual Mustang star and a high favorite with Pastime patrons, will be at the Pastime today in the big three act western drama, "The Quagmire." Thomas Chatterton and all star cast are in her support.

"The Quagmire" is truly a western story. Those scenes are all laid in the free and untrampled west, where might is law.

Mutt and Jeff will also be seen in cartoon capers, entitled "Mutt and Jeff in a Day in Camp."

Paddy McQuire, the funny comedian, will also be seen in "Her Luckless Scheme," a laughable two act farce. Admission, 10c; children, 5c.

ACTORS IN "THE LITTLE LIAR" HAD TO DO NIGHT WORK

Utilizing a downtown Los Angeles department store for a number of scenes in "The Little Liar," a new Triangle-Fine Arts picture featuring Mae Marsh and Robert Herron, the members of the cast were obliged to work at night in order to avoid the customers visiting the store during the shopping hours.

Mae Marsh, as a cash girl, is accused of the theft of a number of yards of lace from the big store, and because of the fact that she is noted as a "little liar" she is arrested and taken to jail.

The department store scenes are among the lively bits of action in the picture, and Carl Stockdale, as a thieving floor walker, does some excellent work in his role as the smooth and oily manager of the girls and the sleek and polite aid of a well-gowned shoplifter.

Complete in all its details and varying in its scenes from the department store to the boarding house and from the boarding house to the slums and the jail, "The Little Liar" abounds all the way through in human interest and heart throbs.

Robert Herron, as the young newspaper reporter, gives an excellent interpretation of his role, which he has carefully studied by close association with newspaper men and some actual experience on a daily paper.

Mrs. Marsh has never appeared to better advantage than as the little "slaves" in the boarding house, who dream dreams and see visions.

The story has an insistent appeal both to the heart and mind and is, in fact, one of the most artistic pictures released lately from the Fine Arts studio. "The Little Liar" is the feature attraction at the Temple Sunday and Monday.

"THE IRON CLAW"

"The Iron Claw" is completed with the release of "The Triumph of the Laughing Mask" and this the last episode of the popular serial is notable both for the amount of action contained in its two reels and the general satisfaction of the ending will afford its many followers.

The mystery of the Laughing Mask is solved at last and as one of the many who have pondered the question "who is the Laughing Mask?" we must say that the unmasking of the Righter of Wrongs is a most welcome incident. We agreed with one of the detectives who in the end says "no wonder we could not find the Laughing Mask, he's a whole regiment." And so he is in the last chapter.

But the Mask himself assures the detectives that he only became a regiment "toward the end, because he was so crowded by events." In the "Triumph of the Laughing Mask" Legar after escaping from the detectives visits the house of his accomplice, a scientist. The Claw opens door after door and he is confronted by Laughing Masks at every turn. This astounding affair is explained when the detectives arrest about eight men all in the guise of the Wrong Righter. The real Mask is cleared of the crimes he was accused of and he claims Margery as his reward. Legar dies and his death is that which villains usually come to. Margery is very happy, naturally, for the Mask, her champion is the jovial Davy, her father's former secretary.

The episode presents both amusing comedy and vivid melodrama. The production is as usual excellent and Chighton Hale, Pearl White and Sheldon Lewis give performances which compare with their work all through the other nineteen episodes.
