GERMAN GARRISONS ON ANCRE RAPIDLY BECOMING IMBECILES

Blood Colored Water in Stagnant Campools, Bottomless Mud Holes and Incessant British Fire Make hideous Hell of Positions.

(WILLIAM PHILLIP SIMS.)
WITH BRITISH, March 7.—The Germans have abandoned their Ancre positions because the garrisons are rapidly becoming gibbering imbeciles. The position is more hideous than hell's kitchen. Bottomless mudholes and incessant British artillery pounding have made the positions stretch pits too horrible for human nerves to stand. The United Press correspondent is the first American to visit the battlefield.

Chamber of Horrors Mild.
The wax works chamber of horrors is mild compared to the sights witnessed. Zigzagged across stagnant campools, the interlocking shell craters held the colored water. I found myself stepping on German bodies. They lay in all conceivable positions. Sometimes they were piled several deep. I saw arms sticking full length out of the mud and saw legs, feet, half bodies and heads protruding.

Scenes Cover Miles.
Imagine these scenes covering miles. Every trace of vegetation is blasted away. The earth is churned sixty feet deep. The mud is so hot-tempered the prisoners said the Germans were frequently swallowed completely.

Prisoners said the British fire obliterated the communication trenches. Relief is dangerous. British machine guns sweep the darkness, annihilating reinforcements attempting to reach the front. They left the dead where they fell. Some corpses lay there since November.
