BOYS FIRE AN OLD CANON; BLAST IS FATAL TO WINDOWS $200 Worth of Plate Glass in Dayton Smashed; Boom Heard 18 Miles.

WALLA WALLA, Wn., April 11.—Dayton held a patriotic celebration last Friday and one of the events was to have been the firing of an old Civil War cannon, standing in the court-house yard. The powder charge failed to ignite for some reason, however, so that part of the program was omitted. Early Monday morning several boys added six or seven pounds of black powder to the charge in the old cannon, rammed it home with wet paper and "pulled the trigger." The explosion was heard for a distance of 18 miles and more than $200 worth of window glass in the Columbia county court house and business houses along Main street of Dayton was destroyed by the concussion.

WOMEN NIGHT RIDERS BURN NOTORIOUS HOUSE Inmates of "Mules' Ear," Near Pittsburg, Narrowly Escape—Rich Men Flee in Autos.

PITTSBURGH, April 10.—Fifty men and women, including members of several prominent families, fled from a house in Washington Pike, Leasdale, early Sunday morning, when a band of night riders, mostly women, with torchlights, marched to the rendezvous and set fire to it.

The burning of the house, which was known as "The Mule's Ear," and said to have been one of the most notorious resorts in Allegheny county, followed threats to rid the community of the resort at any cost, and came as a climax to an attempt to force the occupants out a week ago. Then a band of women, wearing male attire, stormed the house with stones, breaking windows and doors, and forcing the occupants to flee.

Choosing a night when the revelry was at its height and the place was most crowded, the vigilantes marched silently to the house, applied their torches, then departed silently as the flames spread. The women inmates, with such of their wardrobe as they could carry, dashed out into nearby fields, several having narrow escapes. Male visitors rushed to their automobiles and speeded away.

People make much of little troubles if they never had any great ones.

DOG RESCUED IN NET.

GREENFIELD, Ind., April 9.—Passing a vacant house in this city some time ago, Samuel Bulkin heard a dog barking and a week later, passing the place again he heard a sound as of a dog in distress. He and others went on a search of the premises and found the animal in an abandoned well eighteen feet under the floor of the house.

Boards had been placed at that depth to hold the pump stock in place and the dog was on these boards a few feet above the water. The men lowered a basket into the well but this failed and they finally contrived a net that brought the animal to the surface.

After expressing his thankfulness to his rescuers in a dog's way he ran with all strength remaining to the north part of the city and to a two-year-old baby in the home of parents that had been advertising and looking for the playmate of their children.
