Advertisement for Pendleton Auto Co. featuring an illustration of a vintage motor car. Text: 'Our Idea of Motor Car Comfort—Will You Be Satisfied with Less? WHILE comfort is largely a matter of personal opinion, our idea of comfort is based on the experiences of motorists who have driven many different makes of cars. Their remarks are interesting, especially to the man or woman looking for comfort in their next fine motor car. People are finding out that the maximum in comfort and relaxation is not obtained in driving or riding in rigid, heavy cars. It is only resilient light weight that can reduce road shocks and ease the effort of controlling a car. After experience with the heavy cars and the Franklin, one can readily understand why the preference is for the Franklin, especially in these days when almost every man, woman and young girl wants to drive their own car personally. Scientific-light-weight construction has made the Franklin, in every sense, the practical car—you can drive it wherever there is a road without suffering the strain and pounding a heavy car undergoes—and the expense is about half. As to whether your preference for comfort lies in the heavy cars or in the Franklin is, of course, for you to decide. Our suggestion, however, is to make sure before you buy. Anticipation is never as satisfactory as realization—when it comes to comfort in a motor car. Pendleton Auto Co.'
