OH, MR. HOOVER, A LITTLE HELP IF YOU PLEASE

Wanted—A Pled Piper. No overrun with rats are the farms on the reservation that the farmers would welcome some modern emulatur of the legendary piper who rid Hamelin of its rodent population.

A story indicating the activity of the rats is told by Rev. J. M. Cornelison who lives at Tatalla. He had 100 small chickens and the rats raided his coops nightly. He took to putting the chickens on roosts at night but the rats climbed after them and carried off several nights. Finally the little chickens took to roosting high in the trees but even there were not safe from the voracious rodents. Wednesday night the minister heard a commotion among the chickens and hurried out just as one of his diminishing flock fell from the tree. Looking up he saw a rat out upon the end of the limb upon which the chickens were roost.

ing. The rat, seeing him, jumped from the tree and escaped from the pursuing minister and his dog. Rev. Cornelison says he has but 25 of his 100 chicks left and that others on the reservation have been damaged as much by the rats.

TROOP D MEMBERS MAKE THEIR WILLS

Members of Troop D are today making their wills. Not that they are so pessimistic of their chances of returning from the war but the government requires them to make out forms nominating a beneficiary in the event of their death while in the service. In the event of death, the beneficiary receives from the government a sum equivalent to six months pay of the decedent. Each member of the troop not only names a beneficiary but an alternate.

Each member of the troop is required also to have his finger prints taken and to sign a form upon which are the prints. All of this is giving George Winship, troop clerk, plenty to do. Winship today received his appointment of sergeant so that there is some compensation for the added work.
