STROSSTRUPPEN BATTALION BEAT BY 40 FRENCHMEN

BY HENRY WOOD.

United Press Staff Correspondent. WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES. Aug. 16.—(By Mail)—The story of how Germany's Model Battalion of "Stosstruppen" met its Waterloo at the hands of 40 dismounted French dragoons in the recent desperate fighting for the possession of Hill 304 at Verdun has just come to light.

This Model Battalion of "Stosstruppen" was commanded by no less a person than Captain Rohr, the inventor of "Stosstruppen" fighting.

The forty dragoons lost half their number, but they effected the complete destruction of two whole companies of "Stosstruppen" and after being driven backwards for 200 yards remained all the ground lost.

400 Photographs of Spot. During the three weeks in which the crown Prince prepared his assault of June 25 and 29 on Hill 304, French aviators succeeded in securing photographs of the precise spot back of the German lines where Captain Rohr's model battalion of "Stosstruppen" was undergoing its daily rehearsal for the attack.

It was at 6:30 in the evening that the 40 dragoons holding one of the most important advances posts before Hill 304 saw the "Stosstruppen" leap unexpectedly to the attack. First of all at intervals of twenty paces came three crews of pioneers and liquid flame throwers. Following them at mathematical intervals three crews of hand grenadiers; still farther behind a line of troops armed with trenching tools and rifles; then the reserve troops whose duty it is to organize and hold the ground conquered by the "Stosstruppen" and finally the pursuing troops bringing up the grenades, munitions and ambulances for the fight.

First Assault Repulsed. The first onslaught of the "Stosstruppen" was quickly repulsed. One lieutenant named Leube was buried in a trench, shot to his hips. Twice two groups of four Germans each advanced to take him prisoner, and twice he forced them back with his hand grenades till his companions could come to his rescue.

With nearly all the officers quickly killed, Sergeant Bendenant seized the command and began the organization of the trench. At every angle of the trench a crew of six men were left, two to throw grenades from above whilst the others passed them up.

Down this trench the Germans sought their way, angle at a time. In the meantime two French dragoons Gourhan and LeFouler had succeeded, although each was badly wounded in concealing themselves, well knowing that sooner or later their comrades would counter attack.

After three hours and a half of this hand to hand fighting, French dragoons had been driven down the trench for 200 yards. Over half their number was killed or missing, but with the first sign of weakening
